HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

RUSSIA IN CENTRAL ASIA.

Lord ELLENBOROUGH asked whether there was any confirmation of the news respecting the submission of the Merv Turcomans to Russia; whether there had passed any explanatory communications on the subject of a re-assuring nature; when papers on the subject would be submitted to Parliament; and whether such an acquisition of territory in the immediate neighbourhood of Merv was not in direct violation of treaty obligations to this country on the part of Russia.

Lord LAMINGTON did not think that was a fitting time (6.15 p.m.) to discuss so important a question. If he mistook not, it had been said in a despatch to Prince Gortschakoff that any occupation of Merv by the Russians would be considered by this country a most serious matter; in fact, he had always understood that the occupation of Merv would approach very nearly to a casus belli. Merv led to Herat, and the occupation of Herat might have very serious results for India.

Earl GRANVILLE could not agree with the noble lord that a quarter past six was not a suitable hour for discussing the question that had been brought before their lordships. There was, however, a more valid reason for a postponement of the discussion. He had that day received despatches from St. Petersburg which he had not had time to communicate either to the Secretary of State for India or to the Prime Minister. Clearly, therefore, it would be premature to begin any discussion at that moment. All he had to say then was that the news in the first part of the question was confirmed.

In answer to Lord LYTTON, Earl GRANVILLE said that it would be desirable to allow more than two days to elapse before a discussion was raised. It would be hurrying matters to discuss the subject only two days after the receipt of the despatches.

The Marquis of SALISBURY said that if a long interval must always elapse after the receipt of despatches from St. Petersburg before a discussion could be raised, his experience of the number of despatches that came from Russia would lead him to believe that the noble earl might indefinitely postpone the discussion. (Laughter.) Of course he understood that time must be given to the noble earl, but he trusted that an early opportunity would be given for the discussion of an event of which it was impossible to exaggerate the importance. (Hear, hear.)

INDIAN TROOPS AND SUAKIM.

Lord STRATHNAIRN asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether it was the intention of the Government to employ any of Her Majesty's Indian forces in co-operation with the English troops for the defence of Suakim or in operations out of it; and whether they did not consider such troops, by reason of their acclimatisation peculiarly adapted for the operations proposed.

Earl GRANVILLE said the noble and gallant lord had given a very interesting account of a campaign which he had shared in India and had alluded to the services of the native troops at that time, but he had not referred to an incident which he could not have forgotten of one distinguished general who was struck down three times by sunstroke, and who was not in the least discouraged by his physical sufferings, but struggled on successfully to the end of the campaign.

Lord STRATHNAIRN—I was not aware of that fact.

Earl GRANVILLE said he had always been told that the noble lord himself was struck down three times by sunstroke. (Hear, hear.)

Lord STRATHNAIRN—Oh, I thought you were referring to some other officer.

Earl GRANVILLE said the incident was most creditable to the noble lord. (Hear, hear.) With reference to the question, it was only necessary for him to state that he did not think the employment of Indian troops was necessary, owing to the very weighty considerations, both political and military, with regard to the employment of such troops in the Sudan. But there was one very strong reason against it, which stood by itself—viz., that it would take more than double the time to send them than to send the force which the Government believed to be quite sufficient for the purpose.

THE OUDH TENANT IN 1884.

In treating of the principle of compensation for disturbance in our last article on the Oudh Tenancy question, it will be remembered that we disposed of some of its most important applications. The limit to the amount of enhancement claimable by the landlord and the proper extent of the exercise of the right the power of ejection, the determination of the amount of compensation, together with some other considerations that presented themselves, were treated constructively with as much approach to precision as the nature of the case seemed to us to admit of. We then proceeded to the question of disqualifications for compensation, and in resuming this to-day we are first led to inquire,—should compensation for disturbance be disallowed for any other cause than failure to pay decreed arrears of rent? Other grounds have been suggested, such as failure to cultivate "up to a reasonable standard," and intrigue against the "fair, reasonable, and customary" authority of the landlord. But the admission of either of these grounds would, we are convinced, lead to more serious evils than their exclusion. Our rent courts have no adequate means of deciding what is and what is not cultivation up to a reasonable standard and the definition of such a standard would be at least as difficult to arrive at as that of a fair rent. Punctual payment of rent is in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred sufficient practical security against such neglect of the land, as to inflict any considerable injury on the landlord; and the admission of evidence on such an intangible issue as whether the husbandry of a tenant comes up to a "reasonable standard," would inevitably deluge the courts with a flood of vague, conflicting, and untrustworthy testimony. Intrigue against a landlord's "fair, reasonable, and customary authority" would also be very difficult of definition, and might be so strained as to include the most blameless and even laudable manifestations of independence, such as a combination to secure a reduction of rents. The tendency to concerted action among the cultivators is extremely weak, but it would be a pity to put a legislative extinguisher on the possible evolution, under the auspices of some village Hampden—some oriental Arab of the future—of an Oudh Ryots Defence Association. On the whole, the arguments by which eviction without compensation is supported on such grounds as these may be taken as illustrations of the lucus a non definition of "the reasonable" as that for which it is impossible to give reason.

There is, however, one other ground, besides undischarged arrears of rent, which, with every desire to make the whole scheme as automatic as possible, and to leave as little as may be to the discretion of individual officers, we are reluctantly compelled to admit as a ground for ejection without compensation for disturbance. Cases do and will occur where one or two bad characters in a village annoy their neighbours to such an extent by burning their houses and grain heaps, cutting their unripe crops, abducting their wives and daughters, extorting money by false suits, and other malpractices, that it becomes the duty of a good landlord, in the interest of the majority of his tenants, and to save his village from depopulation, to get rid of the offenders. To make him pay a fine in the form of compensation for disturbance in such cases as these, would be very unfair to him, and as far as the "village ruffians" were concerned, would be putting a premium on iniquity. To prevent the occurrence of such hard cases as these, it would be necessary to entrust the Rent Courts with power to decide, after inquiry on the spot, whether a tenant whom a landlord had served with an absolute notice of ejection, on the ground of his bad character, was entitled to compensation or not. It would probably not be very difficult to ascertain whether the landlord's desire to evict was due to interested or disinterested motives. Ordinary cases of theft and other offences, not affecting the residents of the village as a body, should not disqualify for compensation for disturbance; and the right to compensation for improvements should be indefeasible. Except where gross misconduct of the kind above referred to was proved, a tenant whom a landlord chose absolutely to evict without giving him the option of paying an enhanced rent, should be entitled to heavier compensation than if he were allowed such option but declined to avail himself of it. In such a case compensation equal to not less than three years' rent should, we think, be awarded.

Again, should the benefits of any system of compensation for disturbance that may be adopted extend to all tenants alike, or should any classes of tenants be excepted? Thekadars or farmers who contract to pay a fixed sum for the right to collect the rents of a village should, as a matter of course, be excluded, and the rights of all sub-lessors should be held to pass, by the mere act of sub-letting, to the sub-lessee. But all actual resident cultivators, whether paying in cash or in kind, should certainly have the benefit of the scheme, without any restriction as to the length of their occupancy. Grain rents should be commutable at the instance of either party; and if a landlord chose to evict a grain-paying tenant, it would be necessary for the court to estimate the average money value of the rent in kind, in order to arrive at the amount of compensation payable. The case of pahikashis, or tenants who cultivate in one or more villages other than that in which they live, seems open to doubt; but we are inclined to think that the landlord should be allowed to call on them to elect any one of the villages in which they hold land as their future residence, and that they should have no claim to compensation for ejectment from their holdings in any other village.

Should the tenant, again, have the right to make an improvement suo motu, or should the landlord have a veto? The best solution would be perhaps to give the tenant the absolute right to make any improvement he choose, subject to the risk of compensation for any expenditure that did not really benefit the land being ultimately disallowed by the court in the event of his ejectment. Once more: should tenants be allowed to contract themselves out of the amended Rent Act, or should its provisions override any agreement, whether oral or written, to the contrary? The power to contract himself out of the Act would be fatal to the ordinary petty cultivator, who would inevitably fall a victim to the cajolery or intimidation of the first smart harinda who came his way, and from such a tenant the power to write himself down an ass should certainly be withheld. But, to avoid a greater sacrifice than is strictly needful of individual liberty, tenants paying a rent of—say Rs. 150 or upwards, might be allowed to contract on any terms they thought fit. And a special dispensation to the same effect might perhaps be granted by the collector of the district in any case in which he was satisfied that the tenant knew what he was about, and was not being victimised.

Want of space forbids us to do more than briefly note a few remaining points, such as that sums paid into court as compensation for improvements or disturbance should be declared incapable of attachment in execution of any civil decree; that no tenant entitled to compensation of either kind should be evicted until the money has been actually paid into court, or acknowledged by him to have been received; that the definition of improvements should be extended to include manure, whether laid on a field or ploughed into it, and any horse in the village built by the tenant at his own cost, that all mortgages of a tenant's holding or of his right to compensation should be declared illegal; that decrees for rent should not be enforced against agricultural cattle or implements; and, lastly, that the provisions of Chapter 3, of the Deccan Agriculturists Relief Act should be extended to Oudh.

The way in which the numerous questions arising out of any attempt to modify the Oudh Rent Law are to be answered must, of course, depend on the objects at which the proposed legislation aims. In our own view its object should be to confer on the cultivators of the Province as complete security of tenure as is compatible with the existence of the landlord's proprietary right in the soil and with the payment of rent, and to guard them against the pitfalls of mortgaging and sub-letting; and, further, to so far limit the tendency of rents to rise, as to admit of the attainment by the cultivators of an indefinitely higher standard of comfort than that now prevalent among them. The avowed motive for the annexation of Oudh was to rescue the people at large from the tyranny and oppression of native rule, and nothing which has occurred since has abrogated or could abrogate the solemn obligation which we then undertook. So far as we are aware, the only promise made to the talukdars during the negotiations which preceded the Oudh compromise was that prescriptive rights of occupancy should not be created, and no creation of such rights is now in the contemplation of anyone. We must, therefore, protest against the doctrine that we are now debarred from doing anything more than is strictly necessary to prevent the condition of the tenantry from becoming worse than it was before annexation. The country was annexed professedly to raise their then condition, and its annexation could not have been defended on any other ground. No promise to the contrary was ever made to the talukdars, nor would it have been morally within the power of any Government to bind its successors by any such promise. The proclamation addressed by Lord Dalhousie to the people of Oudh in February, 1856, declared that "justice shall be measured out with an equal hand. Protection shall be given to life and property; and every man shall enjoy, henceforth, his just rights without fear of molestation." This pledge was given almost exactly twenty-eight years ago. Let us hope that before the year 1884 comes to a close the Oudh tenant may have reaped the benefit of its fulfilment.—Pioneer.

MILITARY PENSIONS.

THE want of system on which the existing military pension rules are based, is particularly apparent in such of them as regulate the pensions of officers' widows. The following facts and figures will make this statement clear. Should a Lieutenant Colonel of the Staff Corps who belonged to the late East India Company's service die before retirement, his widow receives a pension per annum of £341-11-4, being £250-6-4 from the Bengal Military Fund, and £91-5-0 from Lord Clive's Fund. If the officer at the time of his death is in retirement, even this small allowance is reduced. His widow in such case receives nothing from Lord Clive's fund, and her total pension is the allowance from the Bengal Military Fund that is, £250-6-4. The widow of an officer who had died upon succeeding to his Colonel's allowances receives a somewhat ampler recognition of his services. Her total pension comes to £426-19-3, being £312-18-0 from the Bengal Military Fund, and £114-1-3 from Lord Clive's Fund. In order to comprehend the hardships involved in this condition of things, it must be borne in mind that there is no variation in the retiring pensions allowed to officers between thirty-two and thirty-eight years' service. After an officer has served for thirty-two years he can retire on a pension of £783 per annum: or he may complete his thirty-eight years' service, whereupon he will succeed to his Colonels' allowances of £1,124-17-5 per annum. There is obviously no inducement here for the officer to retire after thirty-two years' service, however much Government may desire his retirement, in order to promote the flow of promotion in junior grades. He knows that, being at that period a Lieutenant Colonel in the Staff Corps, his widow will, on his death, receive no more than £250-6-4 for her pension, for, as above stated, he at the time of his death being in retirement, his widow would have no claim on Lord Clive's Fund. It is clearly more to his interest to do the best to remain on in service, for by a service of a further six years not only will his pension be increased from £783 to £1,124-17-5, but his widow on his death will receive a pension of £426-19-3 in place of £250-6-4. There are no doubt many officers who, if they could afford it, would leave the service after thirty-two years' enjoyment of its pleasures, but family circumstances compel them to complete a full thirty-eight years. Thirty-two years in most cases exhaust the interests and energy the average officer is likely to bring to his work, and the period of service over and above is put in, not from military zeal and enthusiasm, but solely for the sake of the higher pensions. The Government protests that it desires to facilitate promotion in the army. If it is sincere in its protestations it cannot better prove its sincerity than by once more revising the pension rules. At present the tendency of those rules is to act as an active force in retardation of the normal flow of promotion.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally be practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

A RIDE TO KHIVA

BY CAPTAIN FRED BURNABY,
Royal Horse Guards.

Says page 13:—"Two pairs of boots lined with fur were also taken; and for physic—with which it is as well to be supplied when travelling in out-of-the-way places—some quinine and Cockle's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the natives of Central Africa with the greatest possible success. In fact, the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him five will never fade from my memory; and a friend of mine, who passed through the same district many months afterwards, informed me that my fame as a medicine man had not died out, but that the marvellous cure was even then a theme of conversation in the bazaar."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1884.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, Feb. 8; Madras and Allahabad, Feb. 6; Calcutta, Feb. 5.

THE regular mail packet service between Brindisi and Alexandria, which has been suspended since August last, owing to quarantine arrangements, will be resumed in connection with the mails to be despatched from London on Friday, the 29th inst. From the same date the mails for Cyprus and Beyrout will also be again forwarded via Alexandria.

A LLOYD'S telegram from Suez, dated Feb. 26, states:—"Quarantine having been abolished in Egypt, the transit of the mails by the Egyptian Railway has been resumed, and the homeward Bombay mail of the 15th inst., which reached Suez early this morning will leave Alexandria for Brindisi in the P. and O. steamer Tanjore this evening. They will thus be delivered in London on Monday next, or twenty-four hours in advance of contract time. The P. and O. steamer Hydaspes, which brought these mails to Suez, entered the Canal for Plymouth and London at 10.30 a.m. to day."

IT is to be feared that the shipping trade between England and the East will be a hard hit by Mr. Chamberlain's "Merchant Shipping Bill," which has been printed during the last week. The application to that trade of the Employers' Liability Act—in defiance of the tacit engagement made by Mr. Chamberlain in 1880, when the shipowners withdrew their opposition to the Wages Bill—will render almost impossible any modus vivendi between the shipowners and their employés under the peculiar circumstances of the Eastern trade. And the inquisitorial nature of the restrictions on marine insurance will drive all marine insurance to the Continent, kill the underwriters, and greatly hamper the shipowners.

THE Maharajah of Dumraon is doing good service to his country by warmly supporting, outside the Council, the Maharajah of Durbhungah and the Hon. Kristodas Pal in their uphill work in opposing that shamefully oppressive measure, the Bengal Tenancy Bill. The great meeting at Bankipore last Sunday, under His Highness's presidency, shows that the feeling of indignation against the Bill is growing stronger and stronger.

AND the questions put to Lord Kimberley in the House of Lords last Monday by Lord Stanley, show that the wrongs of Bengal and Behar will not lack warm sympathy here at home—and that, too, not only among the Anglo-Indians (who have already taken up the matter with a will), nor only on the Conservative side of politics. Lord Stanley of Alderley has always been to the fore when the weak have had to be championed against the strong; and even the despotic Government of Lord Ripon—distinguished though it be over all other British Governments that have ever existed, for high-handed contempt of public opinion, will have to show itself more amenable to reason when its arbitrary and tyrannical proceedings are brought to the notice of both Houses of Parliament.

WE are glad to observe that the Maharajah of Dumraon courageously commented on the secrecy with which Lord Ripon persists in shrouding the proceedings of the Select Committee on this measure of confiscation. The Times correspondent telegraphs that His Highness "commenced by complaining that the Select Committee on the Bill had met with closed doors and suggested that the Government should be asked to publish its proceedings regularly."

WE heartily endorse His Highness's suggestion. It is well known that, in the recent changes in the Legislative Council, Lord Ripon has carefully weeded out the opponents of the Bill, so far as it was possible for His Excellency to do so, by reason of the expiration of their term of service; whilst the time-expired supporter of the Bill, Mr. Reynolds, has been ostentatiously re-appointed. And it is notorious in Calcutta, that in the Select Committee—that excellent monument of Lord Ripon's justice, which (as Mr. Cross informed Mr. Stanhope the other day) is to weigh the Bill so impartially!—the opponents of the Bill are simply nowhere, being always overwhelmed by the official majority, which will doubtless insist on increasing the drastic severity of the Bill.

WHAT with the overwhelming majority that Lord Ripon has secured by his manipulation of the Council, and with the extreme "smartness" (not to use a harsher word) of all the arrangements for success derived by Mr. Ilbert and Lord Ripon, it is clear—as the Hindoo Patriot observed last week—that the only hope of the people of Bengal lies in the efforts of their friends in England. The London Committee that has been formed to oppose the Bill is fully alive to this fact; and the advertisement of the recent publications of the Committee, that appears in the Times, testifies to the vigour with which the opposition is being conducted.

IT is fortunate for India, at a time when its peace is so terribly disturbed by the dreams and the follies of a Radical Viceroy and a Radical law-member, that so much of the real progress and prosperity of the country depends, not on the supreme Government at all, but on the local officers. Mr. Elliott, the Chief Commissioner of Assam, may well feel proud of the magnificent industry he set a-going last week, when he presided at the ceremony of "opening" the coal-mines.

WHILST the shipping trade at home is being harrassed by the persecution of Mr. Chamberlain and the Birmingham Radicals, in Calcutta it has run a considerable risk from the defective arrangements of the Government in regard to the landing of petroleum. The narrow escape of the Calcutta shipping from the consequences of the burning of the Aurora will perhaps draw the attention of the public to the matter effectually.

THE news of the recovery of Mr. Rivers Thompson will be received with enthusiasm by the Anglo-Indian community at large. We trust that it may be sufficiently complete to enable His Honour to emancipate himself, in the consideration of the Bengal Tenancy Bill, from the well-known influence which is generally believed to have been somewhat unduly using Mr. Thompson's name (during his illness) as an advocate of confiscation.

THE Army and Navy Gazette hints that the Government of India is contemplating a return to Kandahar, and a reversal of the idiotic "scuttling" policy of Major Baring and Co. The Gazette says:—

"We understand that the India Council, startled by the unexpected intelligence of the Russian annexation of Merv, has had under consideration our position on the Indian frontier, and that the occupation of Kandahar, if not also of Herat, has been seriously discussed. The conclusion arrived at is that to occupy Herat would be an undertaking of so startling a nature as to be undesirable at the present juncture. Her Majesty's Government have, however, readily admitted the dangers which would result from a policy of complete inaction, and have communicated with Lord Ripon as to the steps he considers it expedient to take with a view to the reinforcement of the garrisons bordering on the North West Frontier and the occupation of Kandahar. Orders, we believe, will therefore be issued for the movement of a strong body of troops for the protection of British interests in the event of unforeseen contingencies arising to necessitate immediate and decisive action."

BUT in this, as in everything else done or thought of by our present wonderful rulers, the "orders" will probably be issued "Too late!"

MANY of our readers have doubtless been rendered uneasy by the rumours that have been flying about of late in regard to the security of civil or military pensions. The Army and Navy Gazette writes of this growing panic :—

"We hear that a feeling of the greatest uneasiness exists among naval and military officers in regard to the absolute security of their pensions, the idea prevailing that it is very possible that the Pension List will not be allowed to continue to exist and increase at its present rate much longer by a Radical Government, owing to the endeavours made by the present Ministry to curtail in every possible manner the non-effective votes of the Navy and of the Army. Hence the cause of so large a number of men commuting their pensions."

BUT the panic is unnecessary. The Government will have obtained the requisite amount of rope wherewith to hang itself long before these fears are realised.

THE Standard has the following on the Select Committee on Indian Railways, which is really Lord Kimberley's and Lord Ripon's "dodge" to enable the latter to shut up all railway extension for the present, in order to spend the money so saved on the various extravagances of the present régime :—

"The Parliamentary Committee which has been appointed to inquire into the extension of the Indian railway system will have a very wide scope. First, it will have to settle the principles on which railways are to be constructed in India—whether by guaranteed companies, or by the State itself, or by private enterprise, with or without some modified form of guarantee. Secondly, it will have to decide whether, and to what extent, money will be borrowed for the building of new lines, or whether Government will proceed, as at present, by applying an annual allotment directly to the construction of lines, instead of to the payment of interest on large loans raised for the purpose. Thirdly, it will have to ascertain what portions of our vast Indian dominions which at present have no railway communications should be first supplied with them; and in this branch of their inquiry it is not difficult to foresee that the Committee will be chiefly influenced by the capabilities of a district for the production of wheat. And, fourthly, it will have to examine the administration of existing lines, the necessity of doubling them where single, and of largely increasing the rolling-stock. Many of the new lines they will recommend will be feeders to the great trunk lines, and as the latter cannot at present carry all the traffic which is offered them to the sea, they will be hopelessly choked up when a number of new districts are pouring in their produce upon them. With such a programme, when will the inquiry end?"

THE Hindoo Patriot says :—"Madras does not seem to be quite comfortable under the rule of Mr. Grant Duff. It is stated that native gentlemen of Madras discuss politics in the Cosmopolitan Club. He had actually called upon the Advocate General to give his opinion as to whether they could not be legally prosecuted for talking sedition in this civilised fashion. The Advocate General, as a matter of course, has simply laughed down the matter. We hope Lord Ripon will give Mr. Grant Duff some practical hints in the art of administration."

THE Statesman flatters itself that the determination of the Viceroy to instal the Nizam himself is the "first fruit of the courage which this journal (the Statesman) has shown in laying bare the true state of affairs in Hyderabad." It adds :—"We have already announced that the young Mir Liak Ali is to be the Dewan of the State, and by this wise resolution Lord Ripon has raised a strong hope in our mind that the reign of the young Prince may prove successful."

THE Calcutta Statesman becomes more and more audacious in its articles on Hyderabad affairs; and it is difficult to see how the many personages whose public and private characters have been assailed, can honourably abstain from seeking to set themselves right in a Court of Law. It is only fair, however, to note that most of the other Indian papers declare that a prosecution is all that the Statesman wants, and opine that its amiable desire ought not to be gratified. But it seems to us that there are limits beyond which it is impossible for any self-respecting person, who is really innocent, to allow an accuser to go.

MOREOVER, in justice to the Statesman, it must be admitted that the Viceroy seems to have gone out of his way to give colour (to say the least of it) to some of the Statesman's astounding statements. We have already noticed the queer incidents attending the appointment of the young Mir Liak Ali to the post of Dewan, with virtually supreme power at Hyderabad. Now, in the issue of Jan. 29, the Statesman declares definitely that the fact of Major Trevor going on leave (not to return to Hyderabad) is Lord Ripon's "first step to break up the Hyderabad Residency." With reference to the Resident himself, we have already noticed the shocking statements made in former issues of the same journal; and now we are told, almost in plain words, that Lord Ripon refused to be a guest at the Residency, and preferred instead to remain at Bolarum, twelve miles distant. Much of the plain speaking in the Statesman is so very plain, and at the same time so directly rests on the authority of the Viceroy, that it seems absolutely impossible for the Government of India to avoid taking some notice of the assertions made. We refer especially to the first sentence (we prefer not to quote it) of the article headed "Major Trevor's Retirement;" but there are numberless other passages that seem to drive the Government of India into a corner.

THE Times of India gives the following obituary for the week ending Feb. 8 :—

"Mr. James Peake, Assistant Superintendent, Government of India Telegraphs; Mr. Robert Hannay, merchant, Moulmein."

THE Freight Market is thus corrected by the Englishman up to 2 p.m., Tuesday, Feb. 5 :—

"The last week has seen almost a total cessation of business. Only one steamer has fixed on the London berth, one sailing vessel was chartered for New York, and one has succeeded in obtaining country employment. The ships on the loading berth have been forced to accept a considerable decline to fill up their requirements. The unfixed tonnage has decreased to 34,500 tons. Our unfixed tonnage is given at 34,718 tons."

WITH respect to the Tea Market, the following is from Messrs. Carritt and Co.'s Fortnightly Market Report :—

"Public sales were held on the 24th ultimo, when 9,565 packages were offered, of which 9,433 passed the hammer. The teas were principally from Assam, and in several instances showed desirable quality, but the catalogues contained a large number of small breaks. There was rather less inquiry, and prices ruled in favour of buyers for all descriptions, low broken teas and Fannings especially, for which prices may be quoted fully ½d. lower."

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

THE reports on the state of the season and prospect of the crops for the week ending the 29th ult. are as follow :—

"There has been slight rain in Madras, Sind, the Punjab, and in one of the native States of Rajputana during the week. Harvesting continues in Madras, Mysore, and Coorg; in four districts of Madras the yield is reported below average and in two districts up to the average; in Coorg coffee has yielded a good crop, but the outturn of paddy has been under the average. Standing crops promise well throughout the presidency, except in part of the Bellary and Chingleput districts, where they have been injured. In Bombay the rabi prospects are generally good, but some damages has, from various causes, been done to the crop in parts of seven districts. Cotton-picking is still going on in the Berars, and the prospects of the rabi there and in Hyderabad are favourable. In Central India and Rajputana the rabi crops continue to do well, except in Sutna and Ulwar, where rain is needed. The rain which fell during the week in the Punjab was confined to the districts in the north and west, and the crops in the district of the south-east of the province are much in want of rain. In the North-West Provinces of Oudh the weather has been cloudy, but no rain has fallen; and it is urgently required for crops on unirrigated lands. In some districts of the North-Western Provinces the rabi crops are in ear. In the Central Provinces the crops are thriving, and prospects are excellent. No rain has fallen in Bengal, and the crops on unirrigated lands in Behar and Chota Nagpore are reported to be suffering much from want of rain; in other parts of the province they are fair. Oil-seeds and pulses are being harvested, and sugarcane is being pressed with an average yield. In Assam the prospects of the winter crops continue good, and harvesting has begun in some places. The rice harvest is over in British Burma, and the prices of paddy are favourable. Small-pox continues generally prevalent, and cholera is severe in the Tanjore district of the Madras Presidency; there is some cholera also in Hyderabad, Bengal, and Burma, in a sporadic form. Prices are stationary, but high in Bengal."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following telegram from the Indian correspondent of the Times is dated Calcutta, Feb. 24 :—

"A great meeting of the Behar landowners was held at Bankipore last Sunday to consider the Bengal Tenancy Bill. The Maharajah of Dumraon presided, and several leading men of the province spoke strongly against the measure.

"The chairman commenced by complaining that the Select Committee on the Bill had met with closed doors, and suggested that the Government should be asked to publish its proceedings regularly. Other speakers dwelt at length on the harshness with which the measure would press upon the zemindars, and pointed out that, instead of proving beneficial to the ryots, it would really make their position worse than it was, by imposing upon them the necessity of constant and costly litigation. It would simply hand over the ryots to the tender mercies of the middle-men, the money-lenders, and other persons; who had been described by a member of the Rent Commission as 'the worst of rack-renters.' Several resolutions were adopted and ordered to be transmitted to the Government.

"There has been some discussion lately regarding the no-rent agitation, which is said to have arisen in the Mymensingh district. The supporters of the Tenancy Bill assert that it is due to an attempt on the part of the zemindars to force harsh leases on the tenants, in anticipation of the passing of the measure; and they cite it as an argument for pushing on the Bill rapidly. The Opposition, on the other hand, declare that the rumour is greatly exaggerated, and, I believe, deny that such leases are being imposed upon the tenants. The Commissioner of the division and the Collector of the district have been ordered to inquire into the matter, but their report has not yet been made public.

"The new coal industry of Upper Assam was formally opened by the Chief Commissioner on Monday last, in presence of a number of the principal Europeans and natives of the province. The party proceeded by the newly-finished railway from Margarita to the Ledo Mine, where Mr. Elliot inspected the works and declared them open. In his speech he said that the 18th of February would be a red-letter day in the Assam calendar. The coal raised is said to be of excellent quality, and as the mines are now in railway communication with the Brahmaputra, it can be carried to all parts of Assam at a small cost.

"Last Wednesday Calcutta narrowly escaped a terrible disaster. In the morning it became known that the ship Aurora, which had arrived a few days before from America with a cargo of kerosine oil, was on fire at her moorings below Garden Reach. About half the cargo had been landed, but still some 30,000 cases of oil were on board. The Aurora being an old wooden ship, there was no want of material to feed the flames, which burnt fiercely till the evening, when the hulk sank. Two ships, also laden with kerosine, lying near her, were in imminent danger till they had been removed to the opposite side of the river. But the most serious danger was that when the ship broke up, the southerly wind and tide might carry the burning oil to the crowded part of the river, about a mile higher up. Had that happened, a catastrophe on an almost unparalleled scale could hardly have been avoided. The scene as the ship sank, and the unconsumed cases were seen to be afloat, is described as wonderful. The river appeared to be on fire, while the cases exploded with the sound of volleys of musketry; and a thick cloud of black smoke hung over the town. Luckily, the 'slant' of the wind carried the oil towards the shore, while such portion of the flaming material as floated up the river was broken up and intercepted by the buoys. By seven o'clock all danger was past. But that the shipping of this great seaport should owe its escape from, perhaps, total destruction to the opportune accident of a change of wind, would seem to show the existence of some defect in the arrangements connected with the rapidly-increasing kerosine trade. The burning of the Aurora is now being urged as a strong argument in favour of the revival of the scheme for the establishment of a subsidiary port, at Port Canning, on the river Mutlah—a scheme which is strongly supported by the Harbour Commissioners, and which seems likely to take definite form before long.

"It was announced yesterday, to the great and universal satisfaction of the public, that the Lieutenant Governor's medical adviser considered his health so completely re-established that they could withdraw their recommendation to him to leave India for a time. Mr. Thompson has accordingly cancelled his application for leave, and will remain in charge of the Province. Mr. Bernard, who was to have acted for him, will proceed to-day to take up his substantive appointment as Chief Commissioner of British Burmah. Mr. Crosthwaite, who has been acting at Rangoon during Mr. Bernard's absence, will relieve Mr. Jones, Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, who is about to take six months' sick leave.

"The Viceroy and his party returned to Calcutta on Tuesday last. They will probably leave for Simla immediately after the publication of the Budget, which may be expected to appear in the form of a minute in the Gazette about March 15 (P).

"The discovery by Dr. Koch and his colleagues of cholera bacilli in a tank in the Baliaghata suburb of Calcutta, which has already been telegraphed to the Times, has excited much interest here, and is clearly a great step forward in medical science. The chain of evidence, however, connecting these bacilli with the cause of the disease is not yet complete. The German doctors have proved that this organism exists in all cases of cholera, but in no other disease; that it has been found in a tank used by the people among whom the disease appeared, and that it diminished in numbers as the disease died away. But they have still to show whether the bacillus is the cause or the result of cholera; and this inquiry is now occupying their attention. It is satisfactory to know that the water supply of Calcutta shows no trace of this organism.

"A great robbery was committed at the Exhibition building last week, jewellery worth £1,700 being taken from Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode's stall. The thief, a Chinaman, has been arrested at Chandernagore, and the greater portion of the property recovered."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

HISTORY OF THE INDIAN MUTINY.*

AN author is at no slight disadvantage when he comes late into the field to narrate history that has already been given to the world in voluminous detail by such writers as Kaye and Malleon. In his preface, however, Mr. Holmes tells us that he is sure there is room for a book which, while giving a detailed narrative of the chief campaigns, and of the stirring events that took place at the centres of revolt, with a more summary account of incidents of minor importance, should aim at completing the solution of the real historical problems connected with the Mutiny.

After a careful perusal of the volume before us, we can safely venture to assert that the object aimed at has been successfully hit, the conditions laid down have been fulfilled, and that the task which the author set himself to accomplish has been performed with a freshness, spirit, and vigour, such as to attract and rivet the attention of readers already familiar with the leading events of the troublous years 1857-58. The thrice-told tale has a fascination mainly due to the skill and style of the narrator, and to his studied impartiality. The errors and shortcomings, apparent or real, of the most prominent administrators and commanders are not suppressed, whilst any redeeming points in the conduct or characters of less competent officers are fairly set forth. All available authorities and sources of information appear to have been consulted and sifted, and are referred to principally in copious footnotes throughout the pages of each chapter.

For the most part, therefore, there will be found little that is absolutely new to readers who have waded through the volumes of Kaye, Malleon, and others. But Mr. Holmes' work has the advantage of judicious condensation, commending itself to those who have neither time nor will for the study of more elaborate works. The achievements of Civil and Military heroes, with which the book abounds, form one of its most interesting features. Protracted as these were throughout two years, they throw into the shade the later so-called campaigns of Abyssinia and Egypt. The sufferings and privations bravely endured by beleaguered garrisons, and especially by the victims of the Nana's treachery at Cawnpore, are recounted in chapters of such thrilling interest as even at this distant period to stir the pulses of the reader with mingled pity for, and admiration of, his ill-fated fellow-countrymen.

We have said above that there is little new in Mr. Holmes' pages to the students of previously written history. But the sixth chapter will, we think, reveal to them in more minute detail the most extraordinary case of injustice and wrong to a Civil officer in high position, who, on the unanimous authority of Kaye and Malleon, may firmly rank as one of those sagacious and far-seeing administrators who contributed to preserve our Indian Empire in its time of deadly peril. We allude, of course, to Mr. William Taylor, Commissioner of Patna, and are simply lost in amazement that in these days, when honours are often distributed lavishly, not the smallest recognition of his eminent services in serving Patna and Bengal should have been vouchsafed. The tale of his wrongs, as disclosed in the chapter before us, is a disgrace to our country and its rulers. His plucky and prompt action has been conclusively proved to have had the effect of preserving the lives and property of thousands, amongst whom a large proportion were English men and women. His gauge of the character of the Mahomedan conspirators of Patna, by whose arrest schemes of rebellion were frustrated, has been undisputedly shown by the events of later years to be true; and Mr. Holmes shows that, notwithstanding this—perhaps because of this—the commissioner had to endure much injustice from his superiors. The victim is shown to have been deprived of all redress in India, and was driven to make an appeal to the Home Government. For the fate of that appeal we must refer our readers to the conclusion of the chapter, merely noting that at a most critical time in its hearing Mr. Tayler's memorial and other important documents connected with it mysteriously disappeared from the India Office.

And now it is said that the memorialist is desirous of getting his case, as a last resource, brought before the House of Lords. Long, indeed, has justice been delayed, but it is never too late to right a grievous wrong, and we feel confident that some Peer will be generous and disinterested enough to bring the matter forward, and vindicate Mr. Tayler's claim to a proper recognition of his meritorious services, thus earning the approbation and applause of all honest and true men.

MR. MARVIN'S PAMPHLET ON THE ANNEXATION OF MERV.*

NEVER was a more timely publication issued than this one, which we warmly commend to the perusal of all our readers. And more, we would ask each reader to do something to extend its circulation, or make its facts widely known, as an urgent patriotic duty. On the admirable map accompanying the pamphlet, which shows the relative positions of the Russian and English outposts, Mr. Marvin has inscribed, "A glance will show how completely Herat will be at the mercy of Russia after the occupation of Merv." There are also two other capital maps, one showing the position of the Turcoman tribes, and the other the new Russo-Afghan frontier. We will quote Mr. Marvin's preface at length:—

"MERV is lost, and beyond recovery. Herat is in deadly peril, and unless a prompt and vigorous policy in Central Asia be at once adopted by the Government, and supported by the unanimous opinion of the public, the 'Key of India' and the rest of Western Afghanistan will succumb to Russian pressure. In issuing 500 copies of this pamphlet gratuitously to Parliament and the press, I have done my best to awaken public opinion to the real issues of the annexation of Merv; for the moment I cannot do more. But there are many others interested in the safe-guarding of India who may have sufficient patriotic spirit to impel them to assist in this sacred task. If, on reading this pamphlet, they would like its contents more widely known, they can realise their wish and do a service to their country by forwarding a subscription, however small, towards printing and circulating more copies of it. Such donations may be sent either to the publishers, or to the author, Grosvenor House, Plumstead Common, Kent."

Some of the Radical papers are endeavouring to prove the constancy and good faith of their dear friend, Russia, by laying stress on the pretty little farce now being enacted at St. Petersburg, in the "disgrace" of General Tcherniaeff, the author of the annexation of Merv. But even the Times is compelled to allow that there is not much consolation to England for the fait accompli of the annexation, in the recall of the Governor who brought it about. Who shall say how much of reality there is in all the theatrical business of General Tcherniaeff's disgrace? In any case, the Russian Government has not failed promptly to pocket the magnificent advantages gained for them by the "disgraced" man; and this, too, just at the moment, when the incapacity of their allies, the Radical Government of England, has effectually caged the British Lion, by sending off our troops on a wild-goose chase, that only serves to render the British name ridiculous. Mr. Gladstone pretends that General Graham is to march out merely for the purpose of burying the poor fellows whom his Government condemned to death at El Teb; but surely the vultures have already anticipated Mr. Gladstone's exuberant benevolence. And while this hideous hypocrisy is being carried out at Suakim, Mr. Gladstone's Russian friends are merrily doing what they like on what is virtually the Indian frontier. And presently the credulous British public will be instructed by the Caucasus that Lord Ripon, that wonderful genius, may be trusted to make all things right on that frontier. Already rumours of the kind are being put about.

EXAMINATION NOTES.*

THE compiler of this book must be of a sanguine temperament. He has drawn up capital notes by which a youth might be able to persuade a superficial examiner that a vast amount of authorities had been searched on the history of the reign of George III. But he goes further, and in his preface he recommends solicitors to adopt his principle in drafting briefs for barristers, and even believes that leading articles in the Times would be much improved if his system was followed. The preface is closed with the following note:—

"Should any reader be able to refer the author to any Waterloo or Peninsular veteran who could give him a lucid account of any of the battles, he would be much obliged to him."

Considering that a man who, at twenty years of age, had served in the Peninsular or Waterloo campaign, would now be close on ninety years of age, and that it is seldom the custom, or certainly was not that of the Duke of Wellington, to confide the plans of a campaign or battle to youths, surely a man who hopes still to obtain a more lucid account of the Peninsular War than Napier can give him, or of the Waterloo campaign than he would get from Siborne, Chesney, or Dorsey Gardner is a supremely sanguine man.

Though the notes refer to history of George III., we have a note on George II., which we can quote as an example of the form in which the notes are made, which are to form a model for the solicitor and the leading article writer. It runs thus:

George II.—Had nothing attractive about him.

" —Preferred Germany to England.

" —As a son

" father

" husband

} was bad.

Which is rough on George II. It is hard for him to have so complete a reversal of the motto, De mortuis nil nisi bonum. However, this is the sort of information examiners in the present day require, and the work is a most excellent one for the purpose of enabling a youth to answer examination questions with a minimum of solid information; but, if used in conjunction and comparison with the historical works from which it is taken would be a most useful piece.

THE BOOK OF THE HORSE.*

WE have received from Messrs. Cassell and Co. the first number of Mr. Sidney's "Book of the Horse," which is so well known as a standard work on the subject, that it is hardly necessary for us to do more than announce its re-issue in its original form. The plates and general get-up of the work are admirable.

We have also received from the same publisher the first part of a cheap and revised edition of their "Technical Educator." This re-issue is opportune, as the important question of Technical education is receiving attention from the Government.

THE ENGLISH PRESS ON INDIAN RAILWAY EXTENSION.

[WESTERN MORNING NEWS.]

By far the most important arrival at the Great Western Docks last week was the s.s. Sheik, with 2,600 tons of wheat for Messrs. Fox, Roy, and Co., and Harris and Congdon, from Kurrachee. The Sheik is the first steamship which has brought a cargo of East Indian grain consigned to the Great Western Docks, and it is hoped and anticipated that her arrival will prove but the commencement of a large and important trade in cereals between Plymouth and our Eastern dependency. At all events, the cargoes brought by the Sheik and the two sailing vessels which preceded her gives Plymouth a more than passing, indeed, a very practical, interest in the resolution to be moved by the Heckmondwike Chamber of Commerce at the coming meeting of the Associated Chambers in London. This resolution calls for a development of the internal resources of India by an extension of the railway system of that country, the promoting companies to be guaranteed a minimum percentage of profit by the Government. A similar proposition was made at the autumnal meeting of the Association, and although the Plymouth delegates had been allowed discretion in relation to it, the speech of the mover put the matter so clearly and so forcibly that not only did Mr. Shephard and Mr. Moore vote for the motion, but the latter gentleman made a telling speech in its favour. It is now generally admitted that India is destined to become a granary of England, and that all that is needed is a multiplication of the railways by which the crops of the interior may be easily and cheaply conveyed to the coast. Considering the importance of developing commerce between Great Britain and her Eastern empire generally, and the special advantages—as indicated by the arrival of the Sheik—which would accrue to Plymouth from a rapid growth of the grain trade between the two countries, the delegates from the Plymouth Chamber of Commerce to the meeting of the Association next month may see their way to giving something more than a silent vote in support of the motion which stands in the name of Heckmondwike.

INDIAN RAILWAY EXTENSION.

A PARLIAMENTARY Committee is to be appointed to consider the extension of the Indian railway system. There is at the same time an agitation in India for more railways, the merchants of Bombay being particularly anxious to multiply the railways serving that port and communicating with the interior. Bombay is a confirmed rival of Calcutta, it must be remembered. The following appeared in a Times telegram from India last Monday:—"The question of railway extension seems likely to be strongly pressed upon that Government, and to occupy a large share of public attention during the current year. The Bombay Chamber of Commerce has submitted a memorial to the Viceroy, urging the railway extension be prosecuted at the rate of 2,000 or 3,000 miles annually for the next ten years, at the cost of £20,000,000 per annum. They recommend that the sum be raised by sterling loans in London, at a guaranteed interest of 3½ per cent. in perpetuity." Now, while we may assert without hesitation that the proposal to expend as much as £20,000,000 per annum on the extension of Indian railways is excessive, it is a matter of degree and not of principle. We want Indian wheat and other food products, although we do not want too much of them. The Indian crops are ready for harvest in March and April, and it is always well to have a supply of fresh wheat in the early summer, when other stocks are more or less exhausted; but our requirements are not the main consideration. There is often a famine in one part of India, and at the same time a surplus of food products in another; and the surplus will not flow to the deficient localities for want of inland communication. With railways available, there would always be a market either at hand or abroad. The general prosperity of India would, therefore, greatly increase. English trade would at once feel a spur and a rapid development in India by railways. Not only should we send much railway iron and material, but we should introduce improved machinery into Indian methods of farming. At present the ryot ploughs with a crooked piece of iron-pointed wood, and harrows with a kind of ladder dragged crosswise by cattle. He sows by hand, reaps with a sickle, carries the sheaves by hand, and thrashes with a wooden stick. Here, then, is a fine market for English machinery as soon as we can reach it by means of railways. It will not do, however, to go too fast. If the proposed railways do not show any distinct promise of direct profit, it can hardly be wise to build them simply for the sake of the indirect advantage to some remote villages in India, or to the railway and implement manufacturers of Sheffield.

At present there are great gaps and unoccupied spaces in the railway system of India. Between Hyderabad and Delhi the open spaces are very large and blank, but this is due more or less to the presence of a great desert intervening. On the Eastern side, between Calcutta and the region occupied by the Madras Railway, there is hardly a single line of railway. Between Delhi and Calcutta the district is comparatively well served. The East Indian Railway stretches from Calcutta to Delhi, and the Scinde, Punjab, and Delhi continues the line to the north west. North of the East Indian line shoot out the Northern Bengal Railway, the Bengal and North Western, and the Oude and Rohilkund. Bombay, on the west side, is connected with the interior by the Bombay, Baroda, and Central, which reaches up northwards, and the Great Indian Peninsula, which extends to the East Indian Railway on the north east, and to the Madras Railway to the south east of Bombay; but Bombay is not at all satisfied with its railway facilities. The Madras and South Indian Railways do something to serve the southern point of the Indian continent. It must not be thought that railway-making in India is entirely in abeyance. The Central Bengal Railway is in course of uniting Calcutta with Khulna, and this is a small but important link. The Southern Mahratta is also in course of extension, besides some of the northern branches just mentioned. The railways which, in the opinion of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, are most urgently wanted, appear to centre in a place called Jhansi, about 200 miles south of Delhi. From this place branches are required to touch Gwalior on the north, Cawnpore on the north east, while Rutlaum is to be reached on the west. Calcutta, further says the Chamber, wants a line to Nagpur on the great Indian Peninsula, which, of course, will be understood to mean that Bombay wants to get a direct route, via Nagpur, to Calcutta. It seems that the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal advocates the construction of the Calcutta Nagpur line as being of the greatest importance, not only in completing the direct route from Bombay to Calcutta, which is at present partly formed by the Great Indian Peninsula, but also in connection with the famine relief which can be given by Bengal to the Central Provinces, or vice versa, as circumstances may require from time to time.

The magnitude of the scheme for extending the Indian Railway system has to be considered in connection with the proportionate addition proposed. The length of the railways in India at present is barely 11,000 miles or less than America will sometimes add to its system in a single year. To lay a thousand miles of fresh railway in India would require £7,000,000, and double that amount—which is the outside limit of the probable yearly extension—would construct 2,000 miles. Even then the rate of extension in India would be far less than the average yearly addition in America. So compared, then, the effect of a start in Indian railway enterprise might not be so deeply or universally felt as the "boom" in America which occasionally gives activity not only to the iron trade, but to almost all other business on both sides of the Atlantic, in consequence of the immense call for railroad material at such times, besides the incidental demand for house-building, house-furnishing, for farming implements and mercantile fittings. No "boom" so extensive is likely to be the effect of the Indian railway development, simply because there is no field for such unbridled private speculation as in America. Whatever increase of demand for railway materials, machinery, &c., however may arise, English trade will be most directly in its way.

And lastly, as to the financial side of the question, it seems impossible to attract capital into Indian railways without a Government guarantee. Some sort of initiative is absolutely called for on the part of the Government of India; otherwise the country would languish without railways. The 5 per cent. guaranteed railways already made have, on the whole, and from first to last, given fair returns, although some of them were built at a greater expenditure per mile than was necessary. Good authorities assert that, with a preliminary outlay of no more than £7,500 per mile, almost any Indian railway might be made to pay, supposing due regard be had to the choice of ground; only speculators do not care to come before a British public with a scheme which must pay dividends out of capital for some years, and promises only a moderate return thenceforward. A plain Government guarantee is needed, and India need not offer more than 3½ per cent. Three-and-a-Half per Cent. Government Stock being already above par. To offer twenty millions of new guaranteed stock yearly would probably be to swamp the market, depress the Three-and-a-Half per Cents. below par, and put an obstacle in the path of the railway extension by guarantee. On that ground alone it is necessary to move cautiously, but all the same, it is advisable to move. The present times of cheap materials and low interest are the opportunity of capitalists. A railway can now be made abroad for half the outlay which would have been required eleven years ago; money can now be got far more cheaply and abundantly, on good security, than ever before.—Statist.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

THE GOVERNMENT AND INDIAN RAILWAYS.

The Statesman says:—

"Until the improvidence which marks every step of the Government, both in its public and its railway finance, comes to an end, we shall not cease to expose it. Look at this Tarkessur line, constructed by a body of local capitalists, as fresh proof of the want of energy on the part of the State in prosecuting this great enterprise. The line starts from Serampore, and runs for twenty-two miles through an exceedingly rich country to the Tarkessur shrine. It is, in fact, a branch line of the East Indian Railway, which belongs to the State, and is very wisely built upon the same gauge. And yet, although the East Indian Railway is to-day worth £60,000,000 sterling, or double the extravagant outlay made upon it in the infancy of railway construction, the Government could not summon up courage to build even this branch line on its own account. It calls in the aid of private persons to do a work that it might have done itself, with nothing but the truest economy. And it is now about to allow it to be alienated from the State for the next thirty years. The East Indian Railway does not pay, we suppose, and so there is reasonable fear that this Tarkessur branch would not! The line is to be worked by the State itself moreover, that is, by the East Indian Railway. And although it is humanly certain that the branch will be more profitable than any other section of the same length upon the railway, the Government positively cannot summon up courage to make it on its own account, although it may borrow the money required for the purpose at 3¼ per cent. It prefers to encounter the almost certain forfeiture of an indefinitely large profit, because there is no man in its councils who has either insight or courage. And so this branch line of the East Indian Railway is to be alienated from the State for thirty years, to be bought up at the end of that time at probably treble the cost we should have to incur now. There is no local capital meanwhile available for such work, the country urgently needing every rupee of its indigenous resources for the prosecution of enterprises upon which the State cannot enter. The moral cowardice of it is nearly incredible, and it is in this pottering way we have been going on ever since Lord Dalhousie's time, searching as we said yesterday, for every bye-way under Heaven to reach an end to which the road is as clear as the noonday sun."

It is probable that the detachment of the 3rd, now at Puna will go home in the Serapis on the 7th inst.

RUSSIAN ADVANCES IN CENTRAL ASIA.

Mr. E. STANHOPE said it was not his intention that night to criticise the action of Her Majesty's Government in this matter. The time had not come, nor had the House the materials if they desired it, for in any way canvassing that action. His present object was one purely of inquiry, with the intention, if he could, of obtaining information on a good many points as to which the country was now altogether in the dark. They were assured, in the gracious Speech from the Throne, that Her Majesty held friendly and harmonious relations with all foreign Powers. There were certain facts which, as it appeared to him, were not altogether calculated to improve our friendly relations with one foreign Power, and he, therefore, thought it was exceedingly desirable that the matter should as soon as possible be cleared up and explanations given in regard to it. It was not necessary for his purpose to go back into ancient history. He would remind the House, however, that at the time of the Candahar debate in 1881, one of the great contentions made in favour of the policy of withdrawal from Candahar was this. It was said that our presence at Candahar was one of the main reasons why the Russians thought it was so necessary to advance, and that if we only took the step of withdrawing from that place, that step would be accompanied by a corresponding cessation of movement by Russia. The House would recollect that at the outset of the debate the right hon. gentleman now the President of the Local Government Board, got up following him, and told them that the first act of the new Emperor of Russia was to withdraw General Skobeleff from Central Asia, and to direct that all further advance should be stopped. That was an explicit declaration, which was received with great interest by the country, and it had undoubtedly a considerable effect upon public opinion in England. But the advance of Russia had gone on with accelerated speed, and although he was willing to give all credit to the Russian Government, he thought that it was difficult to escape the idea that there appeared to be an amount of method which would, at all events, convey to some minds the idea of a settled purpose. First, there was an uncertain frontier; then came disturbances for the quelling of which a military expedition was required, or else there was a scientific or an exploring expedition, but the result was always the same; territory was always annexed. The debate upon Candahar had taken place in March, 1881; in June of that year we were informed that an Imperial ukase had been issued announcing the annexation of the territory of the Tekke Turcomans to the Russian Empire, under the name of the Trans-Caucasian territory. So vague a statement very naturally excited the curiosity, to say the least of it, of the English Government, and on July 27 Mr. Wyndham inquired if the Foreign Minister could give him any idea of the territory termed Trans-Caucasian. His Excellency replied that—"It was all the territory beyond the Caspian, and he went on to say that the furthest point was Askabad, that General Skobeleff had discovered very fertile territory further south; that disturbances existed there; that there was Sarakhs also to be considered, and whether it was Persian or not remained to be verified." A few days later Mr. Thompson, our Minister in Persia, had informed the English Government that it would take nine months to complete the maps, and that negotiations for the delimitation of the frontier could not begin until the maps had been officially sanctioned by the Russian Government. In January, 1882, we had received information that a treaty had been concluded between Russia and Persia, and that treaty had established and fixed the boundary of the new Trans-Caucasian territory. In that treaty was one most important point; it gave Russia the right of keeping residents in the frontier towns, though it was hardly a question of the tranquility of the borders. No one could deny that this treaty was one of great importance to England. The next step was that we heard of a survey into Afghan territory, and we heard from the newspapers that Russia was beginning to claim rights beyond the frontier. In 1882 there had been a very remarkable speech made by General Skobeleff, in which he had said that the influence of Russia had never been greater at Teheran than at that time. Then, rumours had spread abroad that that treaty was the only treaty which existed between those two countries, and that there existed a secret treaty which had a very different effect indeed, and gave them control over far more than merely the frontier. The Russian Government had apparently been intriguing with Ayoub Khan, and he hoped that Her Majesty's Government would interfere to stop Ayoub from his journey to seek the hospitality of Russia. Now, we heard that Russia had accepted the submission of the Turcomans at Merv, and that an officer representing Russia was to administer the new territory. The whole question of Merv had been one of prevarication, and was even a more melancholy story than that of the Khiva. The first rumour of Russian interference was in 1874, and representations were made to the Russian Government, whereupon Prince Gortschakoff repeated the assurance that they had always given that the Imperial Government had no intention of occupying Merv. After five years, in July, 1879, M. de Giers had again assured Lord Dufferin, in the most positive manner, that there was no intention on the part of Russia to go to Merv. On August 13, 1879, Lord Dufferin had written, "Yesterday, in conversation with His Majesty (the Emperor of Russia), he was pleased to assure me that there was no intention of the Russian troops advancing on Merv." Then there was a despatch written in 1880, at the time of the change of Government in this country, which probably appeared to the Russian Government a very favourable opportunity for withdrawing from its pledges. This despatch the Russian Ambassador had kept in his pocket until a convenient moment might arrive. It had not been shown to Lord Granville till nine months afterwards, but it was referred to by Lord Dufferin, writing on February 15, 1881, in the following terms:—"I consider the positive assurance given to me personally by the Emperor of Russia himself (as reported in my despatch of August 13, 1879, and commented in my subsequent despatch on August 16 of the same year) to the effect that there was no intention on the part of Russia of advancing to Merv, as still extant and in full force, and as having never been qualified or withdrawn by His Majesty himself or by any of his Ministers. From time to time I have taken care to remind M. de Giers that this was the sense in which I continued to regard His Majesty's gracious communication."

On March 8, 1881, Lord Dufferin again described his assurances as follows:—

"When the Emperor deigned on two occasions to give me similar assurances, His Majesty made use of the most unequivocal language, and an intimation of this kind proceeding from so august a source possessed a direct and abiding force which, of necessity, endured until it was formally retracted."

On March 7, 1881, M. de Giers informed Lord Dufferin that "the Emperor had again authorised him to tell me that there was no question of an advance upon Merv. Not only do we not want to go there," said M. de Giers, "but happily there is nothing which can require us to go there." On June 15, 1881, M. de Giers had said "With regard to Merv, his Excellency said that there was no question of negotiating a treaty with the Merv Turcomans, or of establishing a Resident there." From that time he had no further documents, but he had no doubt that Her Majesty's Government possessed a great many of them. In February, 1884, that very district had been taken under the direct control of the Russian Government. With regard to the importance of Merv to this country, it should be borne in mind that the only policy of Russia was mischief towards this country. He was not afflicted with what the Duke of Argyll had called "Mervousness," but now they had the positive assurance that the Russians were at Merv. They were now face to face with the problems which had been acknowledged to present great difficulties. Under these circumstances he preferred not to advance his own opinions; he relied on those of a statesman in whom he knew Her Majesty's Government placed great reliance. His first extract was from a despatch from Lord Northbrook to Lord Salisbury on June 7, 1875:—

"Much discussion has recently taken place as to the effect that would be produced by a Russian advance to Merv. We have therefore stated to Her Majesty's Government our apprehension that the assumption by Russia of authority over the whole Turcoman country would create alarm in Afghanistan, and we think it desirable to express our opinion of the course which should be adopted if it should take place. It would then become necessary to give additional and more specific assurances to the ruler of Afghanistan that we are prepared to assist him to defend Afghanistan against attacks from without. It would probably be desirable to enter into a treaty engagement with him, and the establishment of a British Resident at Herat would be the natural consequence of such an engagement, and of the nearer approach of the Russian frontier."

In accordance with this declaration, Lord Derby sent a memorandum to the Russian Government on October 25, 1875, of which the following was an extract:—

"They (the Government) cannot but feel that such an event, for instance, as the occupation of Merv, which would bring the line of Russian territory into direct contact with Afghan territory, would arouse the susceptibilities of the Ameer to the highest degree, and would possibly involve him in a common cause of defensive action with the Turcoman tribes on his borders. Under such circumstances, it is necessary to observe how difficult it might be for the Imperial Government to maintain a policy of strict abstention in accordance with its present assurances, or how impossible it might be for Her Majesty's Government to exert any effectual control over the actions of the Ameer, without undertaking responsibilities which they would most reluctantly assume, and which would involve the very result which both Governments desire to avert—namely, the contract of the two Powers in Central Asia."

On June 13, 1877, Lord Derby instructed Lord Augustus Loftus "to make a renewed representation to the Government of Russia on the subject of the movements of Russian troops, now taking place on the Turcoman steppe," recalling the above observations to their recollection, and clearly, though cautiously, pointing out that the occupation of Merv would be held by the general opinion of the inhabitants of the neighbouring regions of Asia to announce a design on the part of His Majesty the Emperor of Russia to extend his influence, if not his domination, into the territories with which Her Majesty's Government had understood from the Government of His Imperial Majesty that it was not His Majesty's intention to interfere. Such an impression would impose upon Her Majesty's Government the necessity of making a corresponding advance in order to allay apprehension, and to remove misconception from the minds of the people of those countries. They could not, however, look upon so close an approximation of the outposts of the two empires as in itself desirable or likely to facilitate the discharge of the difficult duties with which the administration of each Government were charged. Her Majesty's Government, therefore, hoped that the Emperor of Russia would issue to his officers in those countries the strictest injunctions to abstain in the course of any operations which the misconduct of the Turcomans might render necessary from advancing into the neighbourhood of Merv. Did the House remember the engagement into which we had entered with the Ameer? It was dated June 14, 1880. It was not one of the engagements of the late Government, but one solely entered into by right hon. gentlemen opposite. Mr. Griffin, our Envoy, said in his letter to Abdurrahman, in conformity with his instructions:—

"With regard to the position of the ruler of Cabul to foreign Powers, since the British Government admit no right of interference by foreign Powers in Afghanistan, and since both Russia and Persia are pledged to abstain from all political interference with Afghanistan, it is plain that the Cabul ruler can have no political relations with any foreign Power except the English; and if any such foreign Power should attempt to interfere in Afghanistan, and if such interference should lead to unprovoked aggression on the Cabul ruler, then the British Government will be prepared to aid him, if necessary, to repel it; provided that he follows the advice of the British Government in regard to his external relations."

Well, he had followed, he believed, the advice of the British Government in regard to his external relations, and therefore the conditional engagement, guarded by the three "ifs," came into full force. The way in which the Ameer himself regarded it might be seen by his answer of June 22, 1880:—

"You have also kindly written that should any unwarranted (improper) attack be made by any other Power on Afghanistan, you will, under the circumstances, afford me assistance, and you will not permit any other person to take possession of the territory of Afghanistan. This also is my desire, which you have kindly granted."

Now, he repeated, they were face to face with their engagement. The frontiers of Afghanistan and Russia practically touched, and the Ameer might call upon them at any moment to fulfil the pledges they had made. He did not for a moment desire the Government to enter into any detailed account of what course they intended to take; they could not, however, say that they were taken by surprise. Everybody who had followed the question was quite aware of the likelihood of this further step being taken, and therefore, it had been perfectly open to them to make any preparation they thought necessary. He thought, however, that they were entitled to ask for a frank declaration from the Government that they adhered to that portion of their policy which had been adopted by both political parties—(hear, hear)—and which had hitherto remained unbroken—that they adhered, in fact, to that policy which had always been accepted in that country—namely, that British interests must dominate in Afghanistan. There was another question—that of the boundary of Afghanistan—to which he also wished to call attention. Were the Government prepared to adhere to the frontier mentioned by Lord Granville in 1872, and to insist upon it? It was not his desire in any way to embarrass the action of the Government; he recognised to the full, indeed—everyone must feel—the extreme gravity of the occasion—(hear, hear)—but he was not without hope that the Government might furnish them with some explicit declaration of the course they intended to pursue. (Hear, hear.)

Sir C. DILKE.—On behalf of Her Majesty's Government and the House generally, I have to thank the hon. member for the speech which he has made—a speech marked by the extreme moderation and sense of responsibility which might be naturally expected from a member of this House who has held the position he has when dealing with so delicate a question as that which he has brought before the House. The hon. member has asked several questions, and while I wish to answer them as well as I can, the House and the hon. member will see that it is impossible in present circumstances for me to go fully into the question. The hon. member asked in the first place, what information we could give in regard to a secret treaty between Russia and Persia. That is rather a contradiction in terms, and I am afraid that in regard to any secret treaty of which the hon. member may suspect the existence, it is not in the power of Her Majesty's Government to give any information; but as far as the limitation of the frontier line between Persia and Russia is concerned, I think the time has come when the House ought to be put in possession of further information than it already has, and papers on the subject will be laid almost immediately on the table of the House. (Hear, hear.) Then the hon. member asked what was to be done with regard to Ayoub Khan, who, the hon. member assumed, is about to leave Persia and set out on a journey which might lead him to Afghanistan. In regard to that, I may say we have every reason to believe that Ayoub Khan is not about to leave Persia, and that the papers which we are about to lay before Parliament will comprise a considerable number of documents, showing the steps which have been taken by Her Majesty's Government in reference to Ayoub Khan. (Hear, hear.) The hon. member then proceeded to ask some questions with regard to the Russian action concerning Merv, and he asked for information, not only as to the manner in which Her Majesty's Government had taken steps, but also as to the steps themselves. He pointed out the apparent conflict between what has been done and the language of the Russian Government to the Government of this country, and he showed that he did not expect a full statement on this particular branch of the subject to-night. As he of course knows, the matter is now a subject of negotiation, and it is, therefore, not possible for the Government to speak in detail upon it at the present time. It is, of course, our duty to express our views upon the matter at St Petersburg, and in doing so I may say that we shall be materially assisted by knowledge of the fact, as has been shown to-night, that there is no difference between the front benches in the House as to the manner in which the subject ought to be treated. (Hear, hear.) The hon. member pointed out the danger which might arise from the Afghan and Russian frontiers being continuous. Afghanistan is within the sphere of British influence, and statesmen in this country have always shown a great dislike for the actual contact of British territory or territory under British influence with Russian territory. In regard to this matter, the hon. gentleman asked whether Her Majesty's Government hold to the assurances which have been given in times past to the rulers of Afghanistan, and in answer to that question I have to say that we not only hold to the terms of those assurances as originally made, but I may say that the assurances have been renewed and put in very plain terms between ourselves and the ruler of Afghanistan. (Hear, hear.) The question of the hon. member as to what steps have been taken to define the boundaries of Afghanistan leads me to point out to the hon. member that with which he must be perfectly aware, owing to the position which he has held in a former Government—namely, that there is a danger in defining boundaries in which you may be held to give over to somebody else territories which are not your own to give. There can be no doubt that it may be held that the Anglo-Russian Commission handed over, or proposed to hand over, territories which were outside the boundaries of Afghanistan, and therefore, outside the sphere of the reference. (Hear, hear.) But steps have been taken to ascertain the boundaries of Afghanistan in the north within the past year—steps which I think it would be undesirable for me to state in detail at the present time. (Hear, hear.) The hon. member and the House must be aware that in view of the assurances which have been given and renewed to the ruler of Afghanistan, Her Majesty's Government cannot be indifferent to what is going on in the most remote parts of that country. I do not wish to import into this matter any controversial question in the present critical state of affairs. But I may say that it has always been our policy, and was the policy of those who were opposed to the Afghan War, to make Afghanistan an advanced post of this country, and to set up in that country a strong and independent Government which should be friendly towards ourselves. We believe that we have met with very great success in that policy, and that the Afghan ruler who was not for a long time very secure upon his throne is probably more secure now than he has been for a great number of years. (Hear, hear.) For a long time past his action has been most friendly towards this country, and he has always, at any rate, in recent times, consulted us before taking any active steps of policy. Therefore, I may say that being on these friendly terms with both Afghanistan and Beloochistan, and having, with the full consent of the people of the latter country, and with the concurrence of the Khan of Khelat, taken possession of Quetta, we have entire control of the Bholan Pass, and are, therefore, practically assured on the north western frontier of our Indian Empire. (Hear, hear.) We believe that the policy which ended in the evacuation of Candahar and the arrangements which have been made in order to secure the tranquillity of Beloochistan, have secured to this country a friendliness on the part of the Beloochees and the Afghan tribes, which, as I have said, puts us in a much better position, as far as the north west of India is concerned, than we have been before, and I cannot conclude the few remarks I have felt it my duty to make, without thanking the hon. member for the support which he has given to Her Majesty's Government, and promising him that papers on the subject shall as soon as possible be laid on the table of the House. (Hear, hear.)

Lord G. HAMILTON remarked that the policy which had been announced by the right hon. baronet was an entire reversal of what the Government had previously done with reference to this particular business, and was, in fact, the policy which he advocated a few years ago when it was pooh-poohed by the noble marquis (Lord Hartington) who was then Secretary for India. (Hear, hear.) The course which the Russian Government had taken in securing Merv made it clear that the advance of Russia towards India was steady and continuous, and that no pledges of the Russian Government could be relied upon. Without making any personal reflection upon the Emperor of Russia, he wished to say that in his view the great mistake always made by Liberal Governments in this country in dealing with that potentate had been to assume that an autocrat is always and entirely master of his own servants. The tradition that Russia must get nearer to India was graven upon the Russian mind, but its fulfilment depended largely upon the will of the particular Emperor, and the stronger the line which was taken by the English Government, the stronger would be the power of the Russian autocrat to keep his servants in order. Merv was in the position of a stepping-stone, and it would be just as easy for a man to remain on a stepping-stone in the middle of a stream as for Russia, having set foot in Merv, to remain there without going forward or making a retrograde movement. The matter was in a most critical position, as was evident from the speech to which the House had just listened, and he could not refrain from saying that in his view the answer of the Prime Minister to a question on the subject the other day was most unsatisfactory, in that it showed that the right hon. gentleman did not regard as being of any particular importance the infraction of a solemn pledge on the part of Russia that Merv should not be occupied. (Hear, hear.) It has been said by hon. gentlemen, and he thought, amongst others, by the right hon. gentleman for Birmingham (Mr. Bright), that it would not prove a danger to British interests. (Hear, hear.) He confessed, if the right hon. gentleman would allow him to say so, that he had not been able to make out his views on the subject, because he had stated that he had no objection to Russia advancing until her boundary became continuous with our own. If that was so, they would be establishing the principles of protection, which were not in favour with the right hon. gentlemen, or they would be establishing the principles of religious intolerance, and therefore it was perfectly apparent that if Russia advanced her territory until it became continuous with our own, Russia would become possessed of that Afghanistan which it was the policy of every Government to maintain friendly and independent. There was one expression in the speech of the right hon. gentleman to which he must refer. He said it had always been the policy of every Government to make Afghanistan an advanced post of this country. Although that might be the intention of the Government now, eleven years ago they had an opportunity of doing that, and they failed to take advantage of it. He desired to read to the House two telegrams. One was a telegram which not very long ago Her Majesty's Government sent to their agent in Egypt; the other was a telegram which eleven years ago was sent by the Viceroy of India. They were not identical in their phraseology, but the same fatal abnegation of responsibility ran through both, and those telegrams had produced exactly the same disastrous results. He would take the Egyptian telegram first. In answer to a message from our agent in Egypt asking for the opinion of the Government as regarded the despairing position of Hicks Pasha, this reply was sent on the 11th of June, 1883:—"Report decision of the Egyptian Government as soon as you can, taking care to give no advice." What had been the result? Bloodshed and massacre; and the Government were now forced to do in an exaggerated degree that which was done in order to stop further bloodshed. On the 24th of July, 1873, Lord Northbrook telegraphed, on behalf of Sher Ali, stating, "We are alarmed at Russian progress." Sher Ali was a shrewd man, and he was anxious to know that which every ally of the Government was always anxious to know—viz., how far he could rely on their support. What was the reply? It was couched in different words, but was almost identical in substance with the telegram sent to Egypt:—"The Cabinet does not share his alarm, and thinks there is no cause for it." When the noble marquis the other night referred to the unnecessary and bloody war, the responsibility of which he put upon the heads of the Opposition, he (Lord G. Hamilton) said that war was the necessary and legitimate consequence of the Government, telegram. (Cheers.) It was a most extraordinary fact that, although Afghanistan was above most nations the most greedy of money, after the Government had sent that telegram, £100,000 was in the treasury for years waiting for the Ameer to call upon it. Do not let us repeat the same folly. The Government, he believed, had now wisely recognised the danger that was ahead. They said that they were the exponents of Lord Lawrence's policy. Lord Lawrence's policy was to prevent the approach of Russia, or, if negotiations failed, to inform Russia that whenever she passed a certain point England would declare war. Let us, if possible, get rid of the word "if." The right hon. baronet the President of the Local Government Board (Sir C. Dilke) had admitted that we had gone a very long way. We had given to the Ameer of Afghanistan that subsidy which previously had been refused to him. We had given that guarantee which eleven years ago had been refused to him, and which, if given, would have averted all disaster. We had now practically annexed Beloochistan, and he thought the Government must reflect on the singular unwisdom of the step they had taken in destroying part of the railway which the previous Government had taken steps to construct. Such being the position of affairs, he was sure the Government would receive the support of almost every section of the House if they would only maintain a straightforward and intelligent policy. Although they had no doubt recently obtained a large majority in a vote of the House in support of their Egyptian policy—(cries of "No, no.")—well, a small majority, then—(laughter)—although they had received that majority, he thought the Government must admit their policy had been in most parts of the world a failure. (Cheers.) In every instance they had ultimately to do that which in the first instance they declined to do; and there was this unfortunate characteristic about their policy, that the more bloodshed they had occasioned the further they were from the realisation of the objects they had in view. (Cheers.) The Prime Minister would excuse him if he ventured to state what he believed now to be one of the great dangers in dealing with a foreign Power like Russia. They had had the pleasure of listening to him with a natural admiration at the almost superhuman power he had acquired over the English language; but, after all, words were intended to express what a man meant. What he frequently could not help feeling when the Prime Minister spoke—particularly on a question of great importance, and in which his Government were largely concerned—was that words with him were simply a loophole of escape from positions of difficulty. (Laughter and cheers.) The history of the last four years was one record of sanguine expectations on the part of the Government, followed by disastrous results. (Cheers.) But in every single instance the extraordinary dexterity of speech possessed by the Prime Minister had extricated the Government from the difficulties in which they found themselves. The Minister escaped, but the national interests remained in peril. (Cheers.) Therefore, he wished to ask the Prime Minister—the right hon. gentleman had plenty of courage—plainly to make up his mind what he would do in reference to the advance of Russia. They did not wish him to state what his views were, but when he had made up his mind, he might then state in unmistakable language the intention of the Government. (Cheers.) Let his intentions be clear to the English people and the Russian Government, and let them be accompanied by such action as would show that he was in earnest. (Renewed cheers.) He believed that was by far the best way to avert the consequences which all deplored. His reason for urging this point on the Government was that two-and-a-half years ago the Conservative party ventured to deprecate precipitate retirement from Candahar. The President of the Local Government Board (Sir C. Dilke) rose, and in one of his adroit and dexterous speeches, he put in the very front the statement that the first act of the Russian Government was to recall General Skobeleff to St. Petersburg, and to put a stop to all operations which that general had been conducting in Asia; and then he went on to adduce as a reason for our retirement from Candahar that as military men tried to show that England ought to maintain Candahar because Russia was trying to get to Merv, so the Russian military authorities urged on their Government that they should seize on Merv because England remained at Candahar. The policy of these two great Powers could not be discussed in the abstract. The proceedings of each must bear on the other. (Cheers.) They had always done so, and would always do so until the end of time. This country retired from Candahar, and the Russians approached to Merv. (Cheers.) Let us have no more of such policy, because it was a dangerous one. If the Government would adopt a straightforward and clear policy in the direction of giving a guarantee in reference to Afghanistan, and reversing some of the foolish language that had been used upon the hustings, it would secure the support of the great majority of the House and of the country. (Hear, hear.) It was only, he believed, by such means that we could extricate ourselves from an unquestionably dangerous dilemma—a dilemma which was partly due, no doubt, to the duplicity and the audacity of Russian agents, but also to a considerable extent due to the gullibility and past ineptitude of Her Majesty's Government. (Cheers.)

Lord E. FITZMAURICE said he was inclined to regret the manifest and evident difference in the tone of the observations which had just fallen from his noble friend who had just sat down, from those which fell from his right hon. friend who introduced the subject to the House. The tone of the right hon. gentleman who in the late Government had occupied the position of Under Secretary of State for India was calm and judicious, and was calculated to extricate the subject from the groove of party recrimination, and to bring it into the higher region of political discussion. But in the speech of the noble lord who had once occupied the same position, there had occurred more the tone of those rather bitter discussions with which not many years ago the House was familiar. In his speech old issues were again brought up, old subjects which at the time were fully worthy of discussion were again revived, references were made to papers and despatches which no doubt were technically before the House, and there was altogether a tone of exaggerated discussion. (Cries of "No.") That was a matter of opinion, but there was in the speech one expression, and one only, on which he would venture to offer a criticism, and that was that the only possible object which the advance of Russia in Turkestan could have was mischievous to the interests of this country. He (Lord E. Fitzmaurice) had always thought it was well to neglect, whatever their feelings might be on this subject, that there was one great and good work which Russia had done in Turkestan—she had struck a very great blow at one of the most barbarous and cruel systems of the slave trade. (Opposition laughter.) Hon. gentlemen might laugh, but it was, nevertheless, a well-known fact, and it had been borne witness to repeatedly by travellers who could not be suspected of views altogether favourable to the Russian advance. It was well known that Mr. O'Donovan had been a considerable traveller in that country, and he said:—

"Who shall say whether the conquest of Merv be for the better or for the worse, whether it be in the interests of civilisation or not? For my part, I cannot forget the fact that it is not so many years ago that the Muscovite arms arrived at Khiva and Bokhara, and sent 40,000 Persian captives to their homes who had long pined in captivity there. This was one great step in progress, something that had never been heard of before in the whole of Central Asian history; and if to-day these devastating Turcomans are wiped out by some who, perhaps, are not as liberal as we should be, who shall say whether it is not for the better?"

Then again, before the Royal Geographical Society, in 1881, Colonel Stewart, whose name was well-known in the House as one of the greatest authorities on Asiatic geography, had said:—

"No one in England has any conception of the fearful sufferings of this slave-trade carried on by the Turcomans. I believe the number of slaves in Bokhara, Khiva, and the Turcoman country itself, a few years since, amounted to more than 100,000. Of course, it is difficult to gather statistics on such a point, but 40,000 slaves are said, I do not know with what truth, to have been released by the Russians in Khiva alone. The value of slaves has fallen considerably since the Russians have closed the slave markets in Khiva and Bokhara. The Persian slaves in Bokhara have not been released, but the open sale of captives there has been prohibited, and though a few slaves, especially women, can still be secretly sold in Bokhara, Russia has struck a great blow at the Turcoman slave-trade. The noble deed performed by that power in releasing the numerous slaves in Khiva has added very much to her influence in this part of Persia. In almost every village I met liberated slaves who spoke of the kindness of the Russians in freeing them. Great numbers of the freed slaves were killed by the Turcomans on their return journey from Khiva."

He thought that that point, especially just at the present moment, when the subject of the slave-trade was attracting so much attention and interest in this country—(ironical Opposition cheers)—was a very important point for consideration, and he felt certain that hon. members opposite would feel it was a point well worthy to be borne in mind. He could not help regretting that the noble lord was not himself inspired by the spirit of the wise observations which, at an early period of the rule of the late Ministry, Lord Beaconsfield had addressed to the House. There were two motions made on the subject, one in 1876 by an hon. member who now adorned another place, Mr. Baillie-Cochrane, and the other in 1876 by the hon. member for Kirkcaldy, Lord Beaconsfield, then Mr. Disraeli, used some very remarkable words. He had said, alluding to some remark of Mr. Baillie-Cochrane about the old discussion between Lord Clarendon and Prince Gortchakoff with reference to the neutral zone:—

"But the fact is, that the neutral zone was a speculation in a diplomatic despatch, nothing more. It never was accepted at any conference or congress, nor was it ever expressed in any protocol or treaty. The idea that Great Britain and Russia agreed to establish a neutral zone between their respective empires, and that Russia has all this time systematically violated the neutral zone that was agreed upon, is one of those illusions which, having once got possession of the public mind, it is very difficult to terminate. The fact is, that no neutral zone was ever agreed upon by the statesmen of the different Powers."

It had just occurred to him (Lord E. Fitzmaurice) that one of those people whose minds were possessed with that delusion was the noble lord himself. Lord Beaconsfield went on to say:—"I am not of that school who view the advances of Russia into Asia with those deep misgivings some do. I think that Asia is large enough for the destinies of both Russia and England." Again, in the following year, Lord Beaconsfield used similar language of high statesmanship:—"Whatever may be our confidence in the destiny of England, I know that empires are only maintained by vigilance, by firmness, by courage, by understanding the temper of the times, and by watching those significant indications that may easily be observed." (Opposition cheers.) Again, and to this he would call particular attention, "Now, far from looking forward with alarm to the development of the power of Russia in Central Asia, I see no reason why she should not conquer Tartary any sooner than why England should not have conquered India. I only wish that the people of Tartary may gain as much advantage by being conquered by Russia as the people of India from being conquered by this country." (Hear, hear.) That language was of a statesmanlike character, and was not inspired by that feeling of apprehension which seemed to him to run through the observations of the noble lord. (Hear, hear.) But he was quite willing to admit that, although a spirit of what might be called Russo-Phobia, was an unwise thing, it could be shown that there had been an agreement among statesmen of opposite parties that when the limits of Russia might become coincident with those of Afghanistan, it might be the cause of a certain anxiety, and might be a question which would require the attention of statesmen. (Opposition cheers.) There was no statesman who had ever occupied the Foreign Office whose opinions were more respected than those of Lord Clarendon. Lord Clarendon, writing to Sir A. Buchanan, on March 27, 1869, said:—

"I have expressed my opinion that abstention from aggression would, on every account, promote the true interests of Russia, whose territorial possessions needed no aggrandisement, and whose giving effect to this policy depended upon the Russian Government alone. I should not doubt its being maintained; but I was sure, judging from our own Indian experience, that such would not be the case, and that Russia would find the same difficulty that England had experienced in controlling its own power when exercised at so great a distance from the seat of Government, as to make reference home almost a matter of impossibility; there was always some frontier to be improved, some broken engagement to be repaired, some faithless ally to be punished; and plausible reasons were seldom wanted for the acquisition of territory, which the Home Government never thought it expedient to reject, and could not, therefore, condemn the motives or the means by which it had been acquired. Such, in the main, had caused the extension of our Indian empire, and there was reason to apprehend that such was the course into which Russia, however unwillingly, was about to be drawn."

The day had no doubt now come when the risks and when the position, to a certain extent foreseen as sooner or later to come about, had arrived. As his right hon. friend the President of the Local Government Board had said, they were now face to face with the situation which ought undoubtedly to be met in a spirit of calm and moderation; but at the same time, looking back upon the controversies of former years, it was not difficult to realise—in fact, it would be impossible not to realise, how very far they had travelled since the time in 1870, when Lord Clarendon and Prince Gortchakoff had those conversations to which he had referred. These regions had already fallen under the sway of the Russian Government, and in order to check the progress of Russia southward, it would have been necessary to advance not only for hundreds of miles beyond the English frontier, but also beyond the Afghan border itself, leaving behind a scattered population whom it would have been very difficult to control. The problem now before the Government was, what would be their policy when the military frontier of Russia either was or was likely to be co-terminous with the frontiers of the territories adjacent to India. The Government were accused by the noble lord of indifference at one time, of inability to foresee what would happen at another, and finally of an alteration of policy. For convincing proof that the accusations of the noble lord were baseless, he would refer hon. members to the observations made by the present Secretary of State for War in 1881. How anyone who had read those observations could possibly bring against the Government any charge of want of foresight or of indifference, surpassed his comprehension. Replying to the hon. member for Eye on August 1, 1881, the noble lord (the Marquis of Hartington) said:—

"I have not the smallest hesitation in saying with perfect plainness that I do not think the annexation by Russia of the Akhal Tekkeh country is a matter of indifference to us. I will not enter into the discussion of the question whether that annexation was consistent or inconsistent with the pledges given by Russia to this country. I think that a good deal may be said on both sides of that question; but it has not been entered upon by the hon. member (Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett), and I do not wish to enter upon it now. We are not concerned in the independence of the Akhal tribes, but the recent advances and conquests of Russia have, no doubt, had consequences which affect us in two points very nearly. The extension of Russian territory along the northern border of Persia raises a question of the integrity of Persia which cannot be indifferent to us; and the near approach of Russia to the borders of Afghanistan is not a matter of indifference to us. The present Government have admitted as plainly as any other that the integrity and independence of Afghanistan is a matter to them of vital importance, and that they do not intend to permit interference by any foreign Power with the internal or external affairs of Afghanistan. If Afghanistan were under a settled form of Government, it might be indifferent to us whether Russia or any other country extended to the very borders of Afghanistan. But that is not the case of Afghanistan. It has not, and perhaps it never may have, what we recognise as a settled form of Government."

Now, those words were spoken after great consideration. They expressed the policy of the Government then, and they expressed the policy of the Government now, and how the noble lord, the member for Middlesex, could found upon that speech, taken in connexion with the utterances of the President of the Local Government Board, a charge of want of foresight or inconsistency against the Government, surpassed, as he had already said, his comprehension. (Hear.) There was a complete accord between the policy of the Government now and their policy then. What was their policy in 1881 was their policy in 1884. A moment had come when anxiety must be felt, but it was not a moment for indulging in exaggerated fears or alarm. It was, on the contrary, a moment for calm and moderation both in action and speech. As the President of the Local Government Board had said, it was the intention of the Government to lay papers before the House, feeling as they did that the Government never spoke with greater authority than when Parliament was fully informed of what was going on, and when they had the House of Commons at their back. With respect to the particular step that had attracted the attention of the House—with respect, namely, to the Russian approach to Merv—certain communications would be addressed to the Russian Government, and he hoped and believed that the result of those communications would be to strengthen those ties of amity and goodwill which all must desire to see existing between Russia and this country. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. OSLOW said that the subject before the House interested every Englishman and everyone in India. As far as he could make out, we were to guarantee to the present Ameer of Afghanistan, protection against external and internal aggression. He hoped that the Government would adhere to that policy. If a similar pledge had been given to Sher Ali, there would have been no rupture with Afghanistan, and consequently no war. The policy now foreshadowed was a complete reversal of the policy enunciated in the Midlothian speeches. The Prime Minister said four years ago that India was safe as long as we retained our mastery on the sea. (Mr. Gladstone dissented.) The chief danger with which India was threatened was an invasion by Russia. If Afghanistan was to be retained as a buffer between India and Russia, that country ought to have our strong support. We ought not to allow intrigues to be carried on under our very noses, and we ought to impress upon the people of Afghanistan and of India that we were determined to maintain intact the integrity of the former country. Our policy in the East had not been aggressive, but Russia's policy was different. Russia's idea was to increase her influence in Afghanistan and South of the Caspian, in order to enable her to strike a severe blow against us should difficulties at any time arise between her and this country. Now that Russia was nearer Herat it would be easier for her to intrigue in Afghanistan than it was in 1878. It was all very well for the Government to say that they intended to send a strong despatch to Russia. The important question for consideration was, would Russia keep the pledges which she might make? Had we not a right to think that Russia would act in the future as she had done in the past? She might give us certain pledges, she might say that she had no intention of going to Herat; but would she keep those pledges? It might not be to-day, or in two or three years, but he believed that gentlemen now sitting in that House would live to see the Russians in Herat. No one would wish that we should fight Russia on the northern side of Afghanistan; but we ought to impress upon her that if she attempted to take Afghanistan, or to intrigue with the Ameer we should make it a casus belli. (A laugh.) Hon. gentlemen below the gangway might laugh, and might think that there were many things of greater importance than our foreign policy, but for his own part, he held that the foreign policy of this country was of greater moment than any domestic question, however important that might be. He knew it was difficult, while negotiations were going on, for Government to say what they were determined to do; but he hoped the House would get before long papers which would show the determination of Her Majesty's Government. He wanted to know what were the engagements we had at present with the Ameer. These engagements had been entered into at Cabul, not by an Englishman, but by a native; and unless we were very cautious, we might get ourselves into the greatest difficulties. He thought we had made the greatest mistake when we left Candahar and did not make the railway to that place which the late Government had they remained in office, would have nearly completed by the present time, and which, even commercially, would have been of the greatest advantage to Afghanistan. Without wishing to be a Russophobe, he hoped that the foreign policy of Her Majesty's Government would be strong and determined in this matter, and that, if necessary, they would act up to it for the credit of the country.

MR. ARNOLD remarked that the hon. member who had just spoken belonged to a band of gentlemen who always acted on the "key to India" principle, and if we followed his policy we should, before long, attack Russia on the steppes of Siberia. He happened to meet that morning with a book dedicated to the hon. member for Eye, which described Merv as "little more than a geographical expression. The huts in the vicinity of the ruined castle offer no temptation whatever to an invader." The position was quite altered since the despatch of Lord Derby, to which the hon. member for Mid-Lincolnshire referred, was written. The Tekke Turcomans, after offering their submission to Persia and consenting that the Persian flag should be raised at Herat, had resolved to seek the suzerainty of Russia, for they found it absolutely necessary to give themselves up to one power or the other, and he thought that in choosing Russia they had acted wisely. There could have been no more imprudent policy than that of the late Government in making a convention with Persia, and becoming responsible for one of the most obscure boundary lines in the world. He denied that there was any change of policy on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

MR. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT said he was glad to find that the President of the Local Government Board had recurred to the opinions as to the dangers of Russian advance in Central Asia which he held some twelve years ago; but when he at the end of his speech took credit for the retirement from Candahar, and accused the late Government of an inconsistent policy, he was very indifferent to the facts of the case. In advocating the retention of Candahar, the late Government did not wish to hold a country against the wishes of its people, and they knew that the inhabitants were very willing to place themselves under the direct protection of this country. It was the present Government which broke the solemn pledges England had given to those people, and the consequence to them had been two disastrous conquests and two successive pillages. The House was probably not aware that but for the strong remonstrances of their Indian advisers, Quetta would have been abandoned by Her Majesty's Government, who had fully determined upon the adoption of that course, and it was the only good action of Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty that he had been persuaded to accept the advice of the able officials of his Government. The statement of the President of the Local Government Board with regard to Beloochistan was entirely misleading. The late Conservative Government established friendly relations with that country, and the inhabitants, he was sure, would always be glad to acknowledge the advantages of British rule and protection. He contended that the declaration made by the Government that evening was a perfect justification of the policy which the Conservatives advocated three years ago, and if Her Majesty's Ministers adhered to their statements and defended Afghanistan against the certain inroads of Russian aggression, they would in less than a decade be back again in Candahar. It was amusing to hear the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs talking about the release of Persian slaves by Russia when Her Majesty's Government had once more proclaimed the slave trade in the South. Had the Government considered for a moment the treatment by Russia of her own subjects at home? The noble lord could not with consistency talk about the release of those slaves and hold back information with reference to the gross treatment of certain classes in Russia. The railway which was designed by Lord Beaconsfield for the purpose of promoting the interests of this country in Central Asia had been abandoned, but Russia had been steadily advancing her railway towards Herat. He had frequently asked for information upon this critical question, but the Government had not been able to tell the House how far the Russian line had been advanced. It had been by warlike cavalry that successful attacks on India had been made; and the Russians had gained innumerable horsemen of the finest physique in the Turcomans of Afghan and Merv,

A friendly and united Afghan was more or less of a fiction; the Afghans were divided into many races, having opposite interests; and they would always go to the highest bidder. The temptation to plunder India was the greatest temptation they could have held out to them. They were the traditional raiders into India. (Sir G. BALFOUR said they had kept quiet of late.) Yes, because they had been in the face of a stronger Power; but at the present time the hon. member would not dare to ride four miles outside Peshawur. The Russians would go to Afghan, not as conquerors, but in the guise of insidious friends. As we knew, Russian officers had visited Cabul, and had received every attention from the Ameer, who, it was said, had offered to help them in surveying the road to Candahar. They would make spacious representations, and tell the Ameer to treat England with coldness and with deceit, and that when he got into difficulty the Russian Government would come to his help. Our only security was in an invulnerable frontier; the magnificent mountain chain was a scientific frontier, the passes of which could be held by a few men against thousands. Sir E. Hamley held that it was fatal to our security to allow the Russians to debouch from the passes on to the plains west of the Indus, instead of meeting them in the passes. The Berlin Correspondent of the Standard had recently stated that he had been informed by trustworthy travellers that the Russians had been talking in the most glowing terms of the golden splendours of the promised land to which they would lead the Turcomans. The language of the letter, extravagant as it was, was the language of an oriental people. It was the language in which General Gordon's proclamation to the Sudanese was couched. A great danger was threatening our Indian Empire. Words were not sufficient to cope with the Russian power which, during the time the present Administration had been in office, had advanced 500 miles eastward. They were now within 240 miles of Herat, and they had acquired a new base, supported by steam, from which they could bring up enormous forces for the invasion of Asia. One of the first things which should be done was to fortify Herat. At present it was not fortified, but there were hills surrounding it which might be occupied. The next step was to complete the railway to Candahar. It was much to be regretted that the Government ever sacrificed that place, for with it they sacrificed a million a-year in trade. A million a-year might not be much to the hon. member for Salford, but it was by closing these little rivulets of trade that the present depression had been occasioned. They had lost half-a-million in Tunis, half-a-million in Tonquin, half-a-million in Madagascar, and so forth. Perhaps these millions, had they gone to increase the earnings of the Lancashire operatives, might have relieved the depression the district was now suffering from. (Hear, hear.) He thanked the House for listening to him, and took some comfort from the declaration of the Government. He hoped that they would be firm and clear in their declaration, for the question was one which virtually concerned the people of India, and the Government ought not to consent to hand them over to the domination of the most despotic military authority in the world. (Hear, hear.)

Sir G. BALFOUR pointed out that the conduct of Russia was in direct violation of all her engagements, but thought that they might be assured that the Government were fully aware of the course events were taking. The noble lord the member for Middlesex had said that the present Government had reversed the policy of their predecessors. He was very glad they had done so, as the policy of the late Government would have required the garrisoning of Candahar and Herat with at least 20,000 men. He quite agreed with the policy advocated by the Prime Minister in 1879, of retirement from Afghanistan. After the moderate speech of the hon. member for Mid-Lincolnshire, he hoped that the time had come when those questions would cease to be the occasions of party conflict.

Mr. BOURKE said that there seemed to be a general desire that the debate should come to an end, but as he had been the first to draw the attention of the House to the question, he hoped to be allowed to make a few remarks. He agreed with his hon. friend the member for Mid-Lincolnshire and the right hon. gentleman opposite that the subject was one which must be approached with a deep sense of responsibility. There was no doubt that the event which had just occurred was one which had been foreseen for many years, and was of the greatest importance. It was important to this country, important to Afghanistan, to India, and even to Europe. Afghanistan looked upon the event as a step towards its own incorporation with Russia. The expectation of what had now happened had existed long in the minds of the rulers of Afghanistan, and led Shere Ali to believe that he had been deserted by England. Tremendous effect would also be caused upon many minds in England, because it had been the traditional policy of the northern neighbours of India to invade India; anything which disquieted our northern frontier disquieted the whole of India. All Europe had been surprised at the calmness with which the news was received in England, as this question had always been regarded as one of the cardinal points of our policy. He was satisfied with the assurances which the noble lord had given, but he regretted to see that the noble lord still seemed to cling to belief in the assurances of Russia. He was glad to hear that the Government were taking measures with respect to the boundaries of Afghanistan, and hoped that those measures would be effective. The boundaries towards the north basis were quite as important as those connected with Merv, and he therefore hoped the Government would attend to that portion of the subject. (Hear, hear.) He would impress on the Government not to be satisfied with diplomatic communications that might pass between the two Governments. He should be glad to see those communications, but he attached very little importance to them, because the question after all was what we were to do in India, and it would be perfectly competent for the Government to say, without consulting any Power, that as these events had occurred, they would take those steps which they deemed advisable. It was the duty of the Government to concert measures with the Government of India with respect to our frontier in Afghanistan. We were under a very onerous engagement with the Ameer. It imposed a tremendous obligation on the Government, and he should be the last to ask the Government to tell the House how that obligation was going to be carried out. The late Government had been accused of being anxious to send an army to Herat, but that was not the case. There never was any proposal of that kind that he was aware of. The Government were now perfectly free to take what steps they pleased, and though they might appear aggressive, that ought not to give umbrage to Russia. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. CAINE remarked that the hon. member for Eye had stated that in consequence of the railway to Candahar not being made we had lost one million of trade. They could not lose what they never had, and as a matter of fact, the trade with Afghanistan was greater than ever. (Hear.)

THE RUSSIANS AT MERV. TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—It is certainly an interesting piece of information which the official Russian Advertiser is kind enough to furnish with reference to the submission of the four Turcoman tribes in and around Merv—namely, the Tokhtamish, Otamish, Sarik, and Salor Turcomans—to General Rohrberg, as the representative of the Czar, under whose benign and strong rule the well-disposed Turcomans now hope to introduce welfare, order, and security in the country on the banks of the Tejend and Murgab. Strange indeed! The most unruly adventurers of the Central Asian Steppes, who boasted twenty years ago before the writer of these lines that royalty is not according to their taste, and that with them everybody is a king; the reckless robbers who laughed at me when I informed them that there are countries in the world where to rob and steal is looked upon as a rather unbecoming and unfashionable business—well, these adventurers and thieves have now suddenly become anxious to get a thief—nay, an Emperor; and, to our great amazement, they show willingness to be governed, taxed, and led on the path of modern civilisation by the mighty tutor on the Neva.

I repeat, the story is utterly strange and surprising, and we could scarcely credit it if it were not for the events which have preceded this unexpected result—unexpected, of course, only to those uninitiated in the mysteries of the Tekke country, and to the host of political optimists in England, who, lulled into the sleep of security by the promises of Russia, did not like to hear much about Merv. But how could we help it? The cruel evidence of facts will not be so easily put aside, and still less can it be attributed to visionary combination of anti-Russian writers. Taking fully into account the theatrical effect of the twenty-four delegates sent by 48,000 families, as well as the high-sounding assurances of allegiance proffered by the Khans and the representatives of the people—for the readers of the late Mr. O'Donovan's book on the Merv Oasis will hardly believe in the sense of common interest of the Mervites—we still cannot underrate the importance of Russia's doings at the western spurs of the Paropamisus Mountains, and we cannot conceal from ourselves the fact that she has made a clever stroke of policy, the sound of which will soon re-echo in the valleys of the Hindoo Koosh—nay, reach the rocky wall of the Suleiman range.

Before all, let us put the question—Is Russia really the mistress of Merv, and by what means has she gained her influence over that place? If we look back to the events which have passed in the Turcoman Steppes since the capture of Geok Tepe, we shall see that the promises given to the Liberal politicians on the Thames in reference to a future abstinence from any further aggression towards Sarakhs and the Herirud valley have been kept only in the Russian sense of the word. I mean to say that publicly there was nothing done to arouse the suspicion of England, but much more active was the secret agency to extend the Russian influence in a north easterly and in a south easterly direction. It was particularly the last-named line—namely, Merv, the centre of the Tekke country—upon which the greatest attention was bestowed. Commercial and scientific travellers, civil engineers, and military adventurers have incessantly plied between Askabad and the Tejend. It was a regular race after such adventures as might embroil the relations between the Merv people and General Rohrberg, the peaceful officer of the Czar, who was appointed to this post for his excellent administrative faculties, and in whose person the Russians intended to administer a plaster upon the gushing wound inflicted upon the Tekkes after the victory at Dengil Tepe. No wonder, therefore, that these continual incitements have soon produced the desired effect. There was no lack of punishing expeditions, skirmishes, and fights between Askabad and Merv, and nothing must have struck the observer more than the inactivity and want of courage which the famous robbers on the lower Murgab exhibited during all this time; for excepting the exploits of small, isolated Alamans, there was not a single engagement in which the Mervites as a compact body ventured to oppose the uninvited Russian guests. The horrible onslaught and heavy losses sustained by their Akhal brethren struck them with terror, and, considering the absolute want of any sense of common interest, we can easily explain the state of helplessness and confusion which has reigned in and around Merv since 1880. It is in this state of anxiety that Russia has ultimately succeeded in turning the tide of Turcoman sympathies in her favour, and by creating a party which, evidently tired of the useless wavering, and fully convinced of the hopelessness of any Persian or English assistance, has found out that it would be much more advisable to throw itself into the arms of the lion than to be forcibly devoured. It was this party which a year ago solicited the advice and the assistance of the Russian Governor of Petro-Alexanorovsk, and at his instigation the scheme referring to a re-incorporation of Merv with the Khanate of Khiva was brought forward and accepted by both parties; for during the coronation festivities at Moscow the Tekke deputation from Merv was graciously received by the Emperor, and given to understand that in order to gain the continued favours of the "White Padishah," they must make good friends with the Khiva Khan, as it is only through the latter that they can expect to secure the beneficent pledge of Russian amity.

I do not know whether the scheme of a Khivan Governor in Merv has been readily; but I have reason to doubt such a fact. Before all we have to consider the aversion and the old enmity existing between the Merv people and Oezbegs on the lower Oxus, and I hardly believe the Russians can be more hated on the Murgab than the big-headed Oezbegs. (Yogun-bush—big-headed—is a nickname given to the sedentary population on the Oxus by the Turcomans.) Secondly, it must have become evident to the Russians themselves that Khivan rule, far from restoring order, would only aggravate the situation, so that there was no other means left than to come into direct communication with the Mervites themselves, and to accept their assurances of loyalty and of obedience to the commands of the Czar. Now, it would be a gross mistake to presume that Russia will take these pledges of Turcoman friendship so confidently as the English used to do with their Afghan, Belooch, and other allies. No! Russia's policy in Asia has no foibles of sentimentality; orientals are treated with caution due to their dubious character, and it is almost certain that Russian friendship with Merv means a Russian garrison in the Kala-Kurshid-Khan, or in some other fortress, after having undergone a proper re-education and being sufficiently armed. We may go even further, and presume that Russia will also occupy and garrison other points in and on the frontier of the Merv Oasis, for the Muscovites are less credulous than the English, and it never came into their mind to sacrifice thousands of lives and millions of pounds for any place, merely for the purpose of afterwards showing magnanimity by its voluntary rendition. The Russians know very well that Christian magnanimity is taken by the Mahomedan for want of power, and they are fully aware of the truth of the Oriental proverb—"Indulgence is weakness, and weakness is worse than defeat."

The question whether Russia has become the undisputed possessor of Merv can, therefore, be answered in the affirmative. The Turcomans, however, opposed to a firm rule, and unaccustomed to obedience to their native rulers, have nevertheless proved a willing and peaceable instrument in the hands of their foreign victors. We shall observe this feature of their character in the case of the Yomut-Goklen and Tchendor Turcomans, who, after the severe punishment inflicted on them, have become not only most tractable subjects of the Czar, but also assisted Lomakin, Lazareff, and Skobelev in the various expeditions against the Tekkes. The revolutionary outbreaks experienced with the Kirghiz under Kutebar and Kenissarin cannot occur here, in consequence of the narrower limits of the Turcoman Steppes, and from the absence of any assistance or encouragement coming from the Khanates. The Russian victory over the Turcomans is a complete one. The yoke imposed upon the neck of these formerly indomitable freebooters is certainly felt as a great burden, but they will acquiesce in their fate, for it was their national poet Makhdumkuli who predicted a hundred years ago the fate of his nation in the following verse:—

i.e., "This world will be ultimately taken by the Russian;" and as this prophecy has been fulfilled, there is no likelihood of any effort to shake off the yoke. I repeat, therefore, that the Russians will gradually extend and strengthen their sway over all the Turcomans existing between Herat and Caspian; they may also succeed in settling a good portion of these formerly restless nomads in the fertile valleys of the Kubbetdagh, as well as on the Tejend and the lower Murgab, provided that the irrigation canals are kept in good order; for it must be borne in mind that the district of Merv, famous in bygone centuries for its fertility, wants only a few decades of undisturbed peace in order to regain its former reputation, and to become again the centre of civilisation. As to the form of Government which Russia will introduce here, it is highly probable that she will use her influence at the outset to strengthen the hands of the Khan; installed under her auspices and supported by her arms, if necessary, and that for the present she will not take the reins in her own hands. The administration of a native ruler has turned out well in the experiments of Bokhara and Khiva; and will prove even more beneficial at Merv, where the framework of Government must be constructed, and where the people must be accustomed to order. It is a much cheaper and safer procedure, which Russia can allow herself, having nothing to fear either from Bokhara and Khiva, nor from the neighbouring nomads, already subdued by her.

There is, however, one point in the recent transaction of Russia which is not quite clear, and which may produce future complications. This refers to the question whether all the Salor and Sarik Tekkes have submitted to Russia, or whether smaller and larger portions have not separated from their brethren and migrated either to Pendjeh in the East, or towards the Borkut Mountains in the South. If this is the case—and I am sorry to say it is highly probable—then all hopes of future tranquillity will prove a mere illusion. Judging from the quarrelsome nature of the nomads in general, and of the Salor and Sarik Tekkes in particular, we may take it for certain that petty warfare between the Russian Turcomans and their brethren on the Afghan territory will be of regular occurrence, and that Russia, obliged to protect her subjects, will have to meddle very frequently with the Afghan authorities, and pursue the offenders on to the Afghan territory. Such collisions being almost inevitable on the conterminous frontiers of a civilised and of an uncivilised country, I am really anxious to know what means will be employed by the optimist politicians in Great Britain to make such an occurrence harmless or impossible? I mean to say, are they determined to make Afghanistan strong enough to keep in check the nomads upon Afghan territory, and to prevent any cause for Russian interference? Can we conceal from ourselves the fact that the Afghans occupy a very weak position in and around Herat, and should we ignore the further fact that Firuzkubis, Djemshidis, Teimunis, and Tumeris have never been of a very manageable nature, and will now, together with the Turcoman refugees, form the very haven for future complications with Russia? I must confess I cannot imagine such self-deception, and I am at a loss to understand the joy manifested at the calmness shown by the British public on receiving the news of Russia's advance to Merv. This calmness and indifference would only be justifiable either if England could be sure that Merv is the last step of Russia's progress towards India, or if English statesmen have agreed to let Russia come down to the Suleiman range, and to greet her as the long-desired neighbour on the frontiers of India. Unhappily, however, both combinations are wrong from the very beginning. Even the staunchest adherents of Russian friendship are decidedly in favour of the neutral zone formed by the Afghan territory, the best proof of which we may find in Lord Derby's famous threat in reference to a Russian approach to Herat. Still less justifiable is the hope that Russia has now made the last step towards the South. It is all very well to say that Russia acts in the interest of civilisation and humanity, and that it is her fervent desire to come to a good understanding with England! But have we not heard these high-sounding phrases during the last twenty years on every occasion of Russian encroachment? In Prince Gortchakoff's note, after the capture of Tashkend, in 1864, we heard of the mutual good understanding with England. Similar assurances were given after the conquest of Samarkand, Khokand, and Khiva, and after the battle of Geok Tepe. Now we hear again of the only object being mutual interest and welfare, so that we may be pardoned for suspecting that Russia will not cease moving southward until she shall have reached the Khyber or Bolan Pass, in order to be quite close to her English friend, and to be able to whisper in the ear of honest John Bull, "How dearly I love thee!"

I am very far from jesting at the deplorable spectacle of English indifference to Russia's latest move towards the spurs of the Pamir, and I consequently cannot share the opinion you have expressed with regard to the Russian occupation of Merv. The want of clearness and of a well-defined policy in Central Asia is a great defect in the conduct of your statesmen; and if the British public will continue to acquiesce in the half-measures hitherto employed, there may be an awakening—Heaven forbid!—more deplorable than the actual one which similar causes have produced in Egypt.—I beg to remain yours obediently,

INDIAN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

[From the Bombay Gazette, Feb. 8.]

H. M.'s sloop Dragon is, we learn, under orders to proceed on duty to the Red Sea, where she will probably replace a vessel of Admiral Sir W. Hewatt's fleet. H.M.S. Briton (Captain Kennedy), recently arrived, will probably remain with us for the next two months.

H.M.'s corvette Briton has, we understand, received orders from Suakin to proceed to Aden with all despatch. That vessel, however, is not in a position to comply, as owing to some injury to her screw she will have to go into dock for repair.

The 19th Punjab Native Infantry seems to have been particularly lucky, in point of athletics, during the recent camp of exercise at Mean Meer. Out of Rs. 150 given for prizes to the six native infantry regiments contending, we learn that Rs. 135 fell to the prowess of the 19th P.N.I.

It is stated that Lieutenant Colonel W. M. Campbell, R.E., who is now on furlough in England, has been placed on duty in that country on two-thirds of his Indian pay and allowances, for the purpose of assisting Colonel Herschel in compiling and publishing the results of his pendulum observations. The period allowed to Colonel Campbell for this employment is not to exceed six months from the date of termination of his furlough.

The new scheme of defence for the North-East Frontier provides for the taking over of all outlying posts and stockades by the Frontier Police, who will be placed on a military footing and be drilled and armed accordingly. The regular troops in garrison will be, as it were, in reserve, and their efficiency will not be lowered in future by regiments being broken up into small detachments. The Frontier Police will be organised into four large divisions, each under the command of a military officer, and half a lakh yearly will be devoted from imperial resources towards their maintenance. An improved system of reliefs and patrols on the frontier, has been arranged, under which the police will spend part of every year at their local head-quarters, for training and instruction.

The Indian Government sailing ship Czarwitch, Captain W. C. Hotham, sailed on Wednesday for Kurrachee, in tow of the Indian Government steamer Dagmar, Captain Haviland, with the following details:—In the Czarwitch:—four officers, two ladies, two children, 166 men, ten women, and twenty children (European), fifty followers, twenty women, and twenty-five children, and six horses of the C-2 Royal Artillery; one European of the 7-1 Royal Artillery; three officers, 111 men (European), and three officers of the Gloucestershire; two officers and 107 men (European), and two horses, draft of the North Staffordshire; eight men, three women, and three children (European), draft of the Royal Engineers; four men (native) of the 2nd Grenadiers; three men (native) of the Sappers and Miners; and one European prisoner. In the Dagmar:—one officer, eighty men (European), and two followers of the North Staffordshire. The following are the names of officers:—Major and Mrs. P. H. Greig and two children, Captain J. Newton, Lieut. and Mrs. H. Butcher, and Lieut. G. Smith, of the C-2 Royal Artillery; Captain Corbett, Lieut. Beville, and Lieut. Lovett, of the Gloucestershire; Captain French, Lieut. Palin, of the North Staffordshire; Surg. G. O. Stuart Army Medical Department; and Assistant Apothecary Neil.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1884.

THE CRISIS IN CENTRAL ASIA.

"THE day has no doubt now come when the risks, and when the position, to a certain extent foreseen as sooner or later to come about, have arrived. . . . The problem now before the Government is, what shall be our policy when the military frontier of Russia either is, or is likely to be, co-terminous with the frontiers of the territories adjacent to India. . . A moment has come when anxiety must be felt, but it is not a moment for indulging in exaggerated fears or alarm. . . . With respect to the particular step that has attracted the attention of the House—with respect, namely, to the Russian approach to Merv—certain communications will be addressed to the Russian Government."

The words, which we have here quoted verbatim at some length, were used in the House of Commons last Friday evening by Mr. Gladstone's Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs! And Sir Charles Dilke, in the same debate, gave to an astonished and delighted House an assurance which, if words have any meaning at all, indicated that the British Government has now at last given the Amir of Cabul that very guarantee against Russian aggression which, if Lord Northbrook had been allowed to give it (as he wished) when asked by Sher Ali in 1873, would have saved us all the Afghan troubles and thousands of lives and millions of treasure. This is what Sir Charles Dilke is reported to have said :—

"The hon. member had pointed out the difficulties which might arise from the Afghan and Russian frontiers being co-terminous, but when we asked whether the Government would hold to the assurances given to the ruler of Afghanistan, he (Sir Charles Dilke) could only assure the House that they did hold to the terms of those assurances, and that those assurances had been renewed and put in very plain terms between themselves and the ruler of Afghanistan."

"Oh that Lord Beaconsfield had lived to see this day and hear these words!"—will be the thought of many an Englishman (and not unspeakable Tories only) when this amazing reversal of all the Midlothian cant and humbug is noised abroad through the country. When we remember the foul abuse that was heaped on Lord Beaconsfield and Lord Lytton for their Quetta policy, and for their wise desire to hold both ends of the Passes, could any revenge be more complete than that which is shown in the following words of Sir Charles Dilke?—

"Therefore, I may say that being on these friendly terms with both Afghanistan and Beloochistan, and having with the full consent of the people of the latter country, and with the concurrence of the Khan of Khelat taken possession of Quetta, we have entire control of the Bolan Pass, and are, therefore, practically assured on the North Western frontier of our Indian Empire."

Here we get the much-sneered-at "scientific frontier" in all its beauty. Nothing is now wanting to complete the vindication of that policy in India, which was falsely dubbed a Tory policy by Mr. Gladstone, and vilified as such, but which was really the English policy—the policy as much of Lord Palmerston and the old Whig party, as of Lord Beaconsfield, Lord Lytton, and the modern National party. The people of England can now judge for themselves how much of truth or justice there was in those foul calumnies by which Lord Beaconsfield was hounded from office, and which broke that patriot heart; and it is to be hoped, for the sake of the national honour, that the authors of those calumnies will not long be suffered to enjoy the wages of false-witness.

The speech in which Mr. Stanhope introduced this serious crisis to the notice of the House of Commons was one worthy alike of the occasion and of the speaker. It was a model of statesmanlike utterance, and must have smitten with remorse some Members on the other side of the House, when they contrasted its tone with the traitorous bitterness, insincerity, and party-spite of those Radical attacks on Lord Beaconsfield's and Lord Lytton's Indian policy, that culminated in the Midlothian campaign. And we are glad to see that Mr. Stanhope laid due weight on the point of the case that is of greatest present interest and importance, the bearing of the annexation of Merv on our own "scuttle" out of Kandahar. He reminded the House that the chief inducement by which Sir Charles Dilke and the Government of Mr. Gladstone persuaded the country to assent to that disastrous retirement, was the pledge that it involved the simultaneous retirement of Russia from the neighbourhood of Merv.

Mr. Stanhope obviously spoke with the reticence and reserve that are fitting in one who will probably ere long be the responsible Minister for Indian affairs. It is well, however—for the sake of keeping this shifty and ever-vacillating Government in the right path, if for no other reason—that other members of the Opposition, less bound by these restraints, spoke out clearly to the House and the country in condemnation of that unpatriotic policy, which has disgraced the Liberal party ever since the fatal telegram of 1873, and from which Mr. Gladstone has now been driven (as in other things) only by the stern logic of events. Lord George Hamilton's fine oration was absolutely unanswerable in every word, and will arouse keen enthusiasm in India as well as in this country; whilst his demand that the Prime Minister should make up his mind definitely, and let both England and Russia know it when it is made up, without any of the equivocations habitual to him, only indicates the barest necessity of the situation. Nor were the speeches of Mr. Onslow, Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett, and Mr. Bourke of less interest or value. We heartily commend to the consideration of the intelligent public the remarkable contrast between the accurate knowledge and thoughtful patriotism displayed on the one side, and the shallow, presumptuous ignorance and fanaticism of the other, as displayed in the speeches of Mr. Arnold and Mr. Caine. Mr. Onslow made a good point when he dwelt on the utter futility of any reliance on Russian pledges; and not a single Radical seems to have had a conscience sufficiently seared to brazen out an apology for Russian good faith. This is the best we can say for Mr. Arnold and Mr. Caine, on whose performances we congratulate the Radical party.

It is a fact of the highest significance that Mr. Gladstone would not allow Mr. J. K. Cross—who is still nominally Under Secretary of State for India, and the representative of the India Office in the House of Commons—to attempt the ticklish task of defending the Government in this grand transformation scene.

THE DANGER TO THE TEA INDUSTRY FROM THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

We alluded last week to the rumour that Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert would complete the work of the Bengal Tenancy Bill, by overhauling the grants made to the tea-planters and others under the Waste Lands Rules, and resuming those grants or seriously modifying their terms. It is almost needless for us to point out the grave—nay, the fatal injury that would be inflicted on the tea industry of the country by such an attempt on the part of the Government. The first movement of Lord Ripon in this direction will most assuredly have the effect of depreciating the shares of every tea company in India; for even if the attempt should be confined to Bengal, the feeling of insecurity that would be caused by it would certainly spread rapidly to Assam. Moreover, though Sylhet and Cachar are now incorporated in Assam, most of the grants in those provinces were made by the Bengal Government; and it would be a nice point of law whether grants made by Bengal would or would not be affected by Bengal legislation in such circumstances.

We mentioned Chittagong last week as the district that would certainly suffer most severely from any such confiscatory proposals. But Chittagong plantations will at any rate suffer, even under the present proposals of Lord Ripon; so will Darjeeling and the Terai. It is well known that on many tea planting estates the proprietors—or rather, the persons who supposed themselves to be the proprietors until Mr. Ilbert arose to dispel the fallacy—have been accustomed to settle cultivators of rice on portions of their estate to provide food for the coolies and establishment; and now these ryots will be introduced by Mr. Ilbert's generosity to a partnership with the nominal proprietors in the property of the land which they cultivate. Further, the general agrarian disquiet that Lord Ripon's proposals are rapidly setting up throughout Bengal cannot but make the position of the planters an unpleasant and precarious one, in many and various ways. The Government is understood to affect surprise that the planting interest should have so generally joined in the agitation against the Bill; and doubtless in some quarters chagrin is felt at the fact, now rendered quite clear, that the miserable Ilbert Bill controversy has not answered the purpose of inducing the European zemindars and planters to desert their Native brethren in this matter. Happily, the ill-feeling caused by that controversy never extended, in any considerable degree, to the upper classes in Bengal; and it is now entirely dead among them. The planters are hardly, if at all, less deeply interested than the zemindars in the opposition to the iniquitous Land policy of this wretched Government. Their dangers in the future, in view of the possibilities of resumption and the like, now hinted at, are even greater; and we believe that no impartial observer, having any acquaintance with the details of the question, can really feel any surprise at the strong feeling that has already been manifested by them, and that will certainly not tend to diminish with a fuller knowledge of all the fatal consequences likely to result from Lord Ripon's socialistic schemes.

MR. GLADSTONE'S MAINTENANCE OF THE ENGLISH DUTIES ON SILVER GOODS.

MANY of our readers will be glad to learn that a great demonstration is to take place in the Council-room, Exeter Hall, on Thursday afternoon, Feb. 28, against the flagrant injustice with which Mr. Gladstone persists in treating the Indian silver craftsman. Mr. McKay Smith is to read a paper before the East Indian Association on "The English Duties on Gold and Silver Plate: Their Special Injustice as Affecting the Indian Silver Craftsman;" and we are glad to see that the respected President of the Association, Sir Orfeur Cavenagh, K.C.S.I., will lend the weight of his influence to the movement by taking the chair on the occasion. Tickets for gratuitous admission can be obtained from the Secretary of the Association, 26, Charing-cross, S.W.; and we trust that every Anglo-Indian in London who desires to see India fairly treated by England, will make a point of being present to support Mr. Smith and Sir Orfeur Cavenagh.

We have so often dwelt on the shameful contrast between the policy of the Government in abolishing the Indian duties on English cotton goods, and the policy of the same Government in imposing heavy English duties on the import of Indian silver goods, that we need not in this place make any attempt to anticipate Mr. McKay Smith's arguments.

H.M.'s corvette Briton (fourteen guns, 240 officers and men) has arrived in the harbour from the Bay of Bengal, having recently visited Colombo, Trincomalee, Calcutta, Rangoon, and the Andaman Islands. At Calcutta the Nizam of Hyderabad came to see the ship, and appeared much interested with his first visit to a man-of-war. The crew went through various exercises, including torpedo practice and working the machine guns which form part of the Briton's armament, and after inspecting the ship below, His Highness left for the shore under a salute of twenty-one guns. The Briton is now awaiting orders from the Admiral.

The camp of exercise at Bangalore has brought to a close, and the proceedings are regarded as in the highest degree satisfactory.

The Chief Commissioner of Assam has, we understand, been given full authority to settle with the Akas; and he will doubtless inflict such punishment, by imposing a fine or curtailing some of their frontier privileges, as will prevent the recurrence of raids similar to that which led to the recent expedition.

A serious occurrence has just taken place at the Indore Residency Gaol. A correspondent telegraphing on Feb. 3, says:—"At 5 p.m. yesterday the prisoners rose and attacked the native guard whom they assailed with stones. The guard then opened fire upon them, killing seven and wounding eleven. The troops were immediately got under arms, and the native guard has since been increased to double its ordinary strength. Order was promptly restored and all is now quiet."

Mr. E. J. Sinkinson, who has been posted to Lahore as Deputy Accountant General, Punjab, intends proceeding home on twenty months' furlough next month.

Traffic on the Nagpore branch of the G.I.P. Railway has increased so rapidly that the line is to be doubled, we believe, with as little delay as possible, from Bhoosawul to Nagpore. The line is broad gauge, and may be looked upon as the first section of the direct Bombay-Calcutta Railway.

Amongst the successful candidates at the Entrance Examination of the Calcutta University appears the name of Chundra Shumshere Jung Rana Bahadur, son of the Commander in Chief of the Nepalese Army, and brother of General Khudya Shumshere Bahadur. It is a proof of the spreading influence of English education that this young man was brought up entirely in his own country at the Nepal Durbar school.

PROSCRIPTION OF ENGLISHMEN IN RUSSIA.

[WESTERN MORNING NEWS.]

THE Russian Government has suddenly conceived a violent antipathy to the British subjects in its service. An order was issued a month ago by the Minister of Ways and Communications "to the effect that in future no foreigners were to be employed on any of the Russian railways; and on the 15th (27th) ult. another order, emanating, it is believed, from the same source, was given (not by a printed or written notice, as is usual) by the acting director of one of the following lines to each of the chiefs of departments, informing them that all foreigners serving on the lines of railway from St. Petersburg to Moscow, Orel, Varoneje, Novecherkass, and Vladiekassass, in the Caucasus, and all lines branching therefrom towards the German and Austrian frontiers, were either to become Russian subjects within three months, or they would be dismissed from their present situation." It is not wonderful that this decree has fallen like a thunderclap on the British subjects in the Russian railway service. One of them says:—"We, as specialists, appear likely to have our bread taken, as it were, out of our mouths, inasmuch as we are prevented taking similar situations on any of the other Russian lines of railway. We are to be turned out of our present employment should we not choose to become Russian subjects; and should we decide to become Russian subjects, no guarantee is to be given to us that we shall be retained even for a month in our present situations." For men who have been looking forward to pensions for long service this banishment is a very severe hardship. We suppose it is the result of one of those periodical fits of excessive patriotism to which Russian administrators are subject. It has always been a sore point with the Russians that so many foreigners should hold public posts in the Empire. In the task of developing the resources of the country, foreign aid has been found useful and even indispensable. Englishmen naturally know more about railways than the best informed Russian, and so for many years the services of Englishmen have been employed in this department. But the Minister of Ways and Communications probably thinks that the time has come for releasing Russian enterprise from this obligation to the alien. He may think that he and his countrymen now know all the foreigners can teach them. Even if this can be true, and we very much doubt it, it is exceedingly mean to dismiss the men to whose knowledge and capacity Russia owes a large part of such prosperity as she can boast. But we are afraid that nothing can be done to help the Englishmen whose livelihood is thus assailed. It is not a matter for diplomatic interference. If Russia chooses to act in this discreditable manner, there is no law to prevent her. But it will not be surprising if time brings its revenge, and the Minister of Ways and Communications is obliged some day to seek foreign aid once more. Civilisation in Russia is not yet strong enough to walk alone.

THE CENSUS OF BRITISH BURMAH.

THE official report places before the reader in a very clear manner the results of the census taken three years ago in British Burmah. Notwithstanding the many tribes and minor races, only two languages had to be used in the work of enumeration—English and Burmese. The forms and instructions were all printed in the Rangoon gaol, and of nearly 17,000 enumerators and supervisors, by far the greater majority were unpaid. The taking of the census was consequently not an expensive matter. At one moment it was feared that the census would not be accomplished without some untoward occurrence, through popular dread lest it signified an intention on the part of the English to increase taxation. One tribe of Karens, numbering about 500 persons, actually fled beyond the frontier. Another idea was "that the English made use of human heads for inquiring into the future." However, notwithstanding these difficulties from the apprehension and ignorance of the people, the operation of numbering them was very successfully performed. The area of British Burmah is 87,220 square miles, or about the same size as England, Scotland, and Wales. It has a population of 3,736,771, or less than that of the metropolis. To compare like things with like, the North West Provinces have a considerably less area and a population nine times as great, but British Burmah is a still more remarkable product of English care and justice than even the fertile plains of Rohilkund. In twenty years the population has nearly doubled; in some of the most flourishing parts more than doubled. Seven years hence it is expected to contain a population of more than five millions at the lowest computation; and let it be remembered that the provinces of Pegu, Tenasserim, and Arracan have been created since the first Burmese war, nearly sixty years ago. As the author of this report truly observes, "every division of the province tells the same tale of almost unprecedented growth. Throughout the period of British occupation immigration of the kind referred to—viz., the return of former fugitives to their homes, the arrival of numbers seeking peace and quiet under English rule, immigration from Madras, from Bengal, from Chittagong, and from Upper Burmah—has combined to augment the natural increase, probably rapid itself, arising from the excess of births over deaths." The people of British Burmah dwell in twenty towns of more than 5,000 population, and in 15,837 villages of less than that number. Of the latter, not fewer than 14,849 contain less than 500 inhabitants, and the majority of these have under 200 residents. The average of human beings to each house is 5%. There is a very large boating population, of about 75,000 persons to 15,000 boats. These are distinct from the colonies of fishermen, who are also very numerous. Of the towns, Rangoon (134,176) alone contains a population above 100,000. Akyab, Moulmein, Prome, and Bassein are flourishing places in the present, with an expanding future. One other fact may be noticed, and that is the extraordinary excess of males, there being 245,239 more men than women. This volume contains, over and above the statistics, very interesting accounts of the Talaings, or Mons, the oldest inhabitants, whose origin is obscure, and whose language is at last beginning to die out; of the marriage customs and the laws of divorce; and of the infirmities of the people, which are more remarkable among the males than the females. The last fact we need record as the probable explanation of the prosperity of British Burmah is that there are ten acres of cultivated land for every 7.5 persons of the population.

He entered the Indian Medical Service in 1850 and proceeded to the Bombay Presidency, took part in the Burmese War of 1853, and was in India throughout the period of the Mutiny. ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.—Monday, Feb. 18, 1884, Sir H. Rawlinson, director, in the chair. H. H. Maharaja of Travancore, Rev. Dr. Lapsdell, M. L. Dame, Capt. C. A. Moloney, and Rev. Dr. Valentine were elected hon. resident members. Professor Beal contributed a paper, read in his absence by Mr.

R. Cust, entitled "Further Gleanings from the Si-yu-k," the Chinese name for the account of the Western Nations by Hsien-Tsang. Mr. Cust stated that this work was translated into French by the late Professor Stanislas Julien (Paris, 1853-8); that later publications, and notably the excavations at Amravati and Bharhut, have thrown much light on many passages previously obscure; and that the writer of the paper, himself the author of the "Romantic Legend of Sakya Buddha," has, by his Chinese studies and literary acumen, made many and satisfactory suggestions. In his paper he has advanced several hypotheses of great ingenuity, which, at the same time, demand much reflection and further study. Thus, he has gone back to an event in the life of Buddha, the first germ of the famous "Open Sesame" incantation in the story of the "Forty Thieves," in the "Arabian Nights," and also the Western legend of King Arthur and the Cappadocian, one of St. George and the Dragon.

INDIAN APPEAL CASES.—In the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, on Feb. 20, the case of Kali Krishna Tagore v. Golan Ali Chowdhry was decided. This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Bengal of May 10, 1881. Mr. Leith, Q.C., and Mr. Doyne appeared for the appellant; Mr. Graham, Q.C., and Mr. J. D. Mayne for the respondent. The question at issue was as to the right of the appellant, who is the owner of property in the district of Faridpore, to assess with rent the alluvial accretions, which had, since the granting of a lease of a portion of the estate to the respondent, become attached to the tenure of the latter. The appellant's contention was that those accretions were liable to such a rent as would have been payable in respect of lands of similar quantity, and held under similar terms. The respondent maintained that the lands subsequently accreted to his tenure were liable to be assessed with no higher rent than that which he agreed to pay for the lands of the parent tenure. The High Court, to whom an appeal was brought from the district tribunal, gave judgment in favour of the latter view. Their Lordships at the close of the arguments, dismissed the appeal, with costs.—On Friday the case of Alimuddi Howladar and others v. Kali Krishna Thakoor was decided. This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Bengal of the 2nd of February, 1881, which reversed a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Backergunge, in the Bengal Presidency. Mr. Graham, Q.C., and Mr. J. D. Mayne appeared for the appellants; Mr. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. Doyne for the respondent. The original suit was brought by the respondent as zemindar and proprietor of an estate called Idilpore, in the district of Backergunge, against the appellants to recover possession of a quantity of land which had accreted to that of which they were tenants under a lease. The district tribunal decided that the respondent had not performed certain conditions necessary to entitle him to recover the land. The High Court, on appeal, while admitting the non-performance of some of the conditions, held that that did not disentitle the respondent to enforce the terms of the lease. Their Lordships, after hearing counsel on both sides, varied in certain details the decree of the High Court and affirmed it in others. The appellants were directed to pay the costs.—On Saturday, Krishna Nana v. Partab Narain was decided. This was an appeal from a decree of the Judicial Commissioner of Oude of the 15th December, 1881, affirming a decision of the Additional Judge of Fyzabad in that province. Mr. Leith, Q.C., and Mr. J. G. W. Sykes were counsel for the appellant; Mr. Graham, Q.C., and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe for the respondent. During the lifetime of the late Maharajah Sir Maun Singh, K.C.S.I., the appellant held possession, by virtue of sub-settlement right, of certain villages in, and forming part of, the Maharajah's estate of Mehdowna. After his decease and while his property was in charge of the manager appointed under the Oude Talookdar's Relief Act, 1870, the appellant was ousted on or about the 20th of January, 1871. In 1873 the appellant instituted a suit against the widow of the Maharajah and the manager of the estate to recover possession of the villages, and after a litigation extending to June 1879, the Judicial Committee on appeal declared him entitled to be sustained in possession of the villages in dispute for his lifetime by virtue of the sub-settlement right. On regaining possession, the appellant brought the present suit, by which the appellant sought to recover from the respondent, as the successor of the Maharajah, 58,564 rupees in respect to the mesne profits of the villages from the date of his being dispossessed in 1871 to that of the institution of the action with interest. The Indian Courts awarded him 5,427 rupees, being the amount of mesne profits realised by the manager within the period of three years preceding the institution of the suit; but as regarded the remainder of the claim, they decided that it was barred by limitation. Their Lordships, at the close of the arguments, affirmed the judgment of the High Court, and dismissed the appeal, with costs.

THE SILVER MARKET AND THE EASTERN EXCHANGES.

WEDNESDAY.—Refined bar silver was firmer at 51¼d. per ounce, the remittance of £19,000 per Magellan from Chili having been sold at that price. Mexican dollars were nominally quoted at 49½d. Indian telegraphic transfer rates again advanced 1-32d. to 1s. 7¼d. in Calcutta, and 1s. 7 25-32d. in Bombay. Rupee Paper unchanged.

THURSDAY.—Indian telegraphic transfer rates advanced to 1s. 7 13-16d., and the silver market also hardened, additional strength having been imparted to it by the announcement that the Indian Council had sold some remittances on India at as high a price as 1s. 8d. per rupee, a rate not touched for a long time. A small amount of business was done in bars at 51 5-16d. per ounce, and the quotation for Mexican dollars also rose to 49 15-16d. per ounce, although there was no business in them. Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Rupee Paper was very firm, at an advance of ¾, and closed at 82 to 82¼. The Four per Cents were unchanged at 79 to 79½. The India Council sold telegraphic transfers for 20 lakhs of rupees. Fifteen were allotted on Calcutta, of which five were at 1s. 7 15-16d., five at 1s. 7 29-32d., and five at 1s. 8d., the remaining five lakhs being on Bombay at 1s. 7 31-32d.

FRIDAY.—The firmness of the silver market continues, and a moderately active business has been done in bars at 51¼d. per ounce. This is the result of a further advance in the Indian exchanges, the telegraphic transfer rates being now quoted at 1s. 7 15-16d., while the advices give the Calcutta rates at 1s. 8d. Telegraphic reports foreshadow a very large wheat crop in India, and as it is said that the Indian shippers are prepared to accept the present, and if need be, even lower prices, it is quite possible that the export trade of India will be active in the coming season. Mexican dollars are quoted at 50d. per ounce, but there is still no business in them to report, although the Shanghai exchange rate is higher at 5s. 1¼d. per tael. The Hongkong quotation remains at 3s. 8¼d. Rupee Paper has been quiet, and closed at 82 to 82¼, and 79 to 79½ for the Four-and-a-Half and Four per Cents, respectively.

SATURDAY.—The markets were unchanged, no business was transacted, and prices remained unaltered.

MONDAY.—The bar silver ex Buffon which had not been negotiated on Saturday was disposed of this morning at 51 5-16d. per ounce, showing a fall of 1-16d. Mexican dollars moved downwards in sympathy with bar silver, and closed at 49 15-16d. per ounce, without any business having been done. The China rates were unchanged, and Indian telegraphic transfer rates were dull, at 1s. 7¼d., and Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Rupee Paper was easier, at 81¼ to 82, the Four per Cents remaining at 79 to 79½.

TUESDAY.—The whole of the rather large amount of bar silver brought by the Flaxman was sold at 51¼d. All recent arrivals have now been cleared. The absence of business in Mexican dollars continues, the closing price being 49½d. per ounce. Indian rates for telegraphic transfers were easier, at 1s. 7 13-16d. in both Bombay and Calcutta. As regards the China rates for four months bills, Hongkong was quoted at 3s. 8½d. and Shanghai at 5s. 1¼d. Rupee Paper was flat, the Four-and-a-Half and Four per Cents, closing ¼ lower, at 81½ to 81¾, and 78¾ to 79¼ respectively.

WEDNESDAY.—Bar silver was steady at 51¼d. and Mexican dollars were nominally quoted at 49½d. per ounce. Indian telegraphic transfer rates were weaker at 1s. 7 25-32d. in Bombay, and 1s. 7¼d. in Calcutta, but there was no fresh change in the rates received from China. Four per cent. Rupee Paper was in good demand and rose ½ to 79¼ 79½, the Four-and-a-Half per Cents being quiet at 81½ to 81¾.

INDIA IN PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

Lord STANLEY of ALDERLEY asked the Secretary of State for India whether it was true that in the official papers on the Bengal Tenancy Bill published in Calcutta the minute of the Chief Justice of Bengal was not included; also whether it was true that the opinions of the Judges of the High Court of Calcutta on the Bill had not been asked.

The Earl of KIMBERLEY: The minute of the Chief Justice referred to by the noble lord is doubtless the letter from Sir Richard Garth which appeared in the newspapers, and was transmitted home by the Government of India but I am not aware whether it has been included in the official papers published in India. The opinions of the other Judges of the High Court were asked for by the Government of India, but they have not yet been received at the India Office.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.

Viscount ENFIELD rose to move that an humble address be presented to Her Majesty for copies or extracts of any correspondence that has passed since 1881 between the Government of India and the Secretary of State for India in Council, as to "constitutional robustness" in the case of candidates selected for the Covenanted Civil Service of India. He said the examinations were of a very searching character, and brought out in a very marked manner the intellectual and scholarlike qualities of the candidates. In addition to the first examination, candidates were also subjected to a medical examination, and having passed that, spent a time at the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, or Dublin, receiving during that time an allowance of £150 per annum. At the end of that period they were again subjected to a medical examination, which, he believed was conducted in a very searching manner by three distinguished medical gentlemen. He need not dilate upon the fact that candidates in addition to being qualified intellectually should also be fit to do their duty. But during the course of the year 1881, the Government of Bombay sent a despatch home complaining of the character of some of the candidates, not from a moral or intellectual point of view, but saying that their physique was not such as to make them useful public servants. The ages within which candidates were formerly admitted were seventeen to twenty-one, but they were altered by the noble marquis opposite, when Secretary for India, from seventeen to nineteen. Some persons thought that had been an unfortunate restriction. Inquiries had been addressed to the different Governments of India as to whether the complaints preferred by the Government of Bombay were also entertained by other Governments. He was anxious to find out whether that change of age had been fatal to the physical requirements of the candidates.

Lord STANLEY of ALDERLEY seconded the motion.

The Earl of KIMBERLEY said there was no objection to produce the correspondence asked for, but he would only anticipate their contents so far as to say that it might be satisfactory to know, that, although the Government of Bombay made some complaints as to the "constitutional robustness" of the civil servants of that Presidency, the reports from other Presidencies did not confirm those complaints. Reference had been made to the limits made by the noble marquis opposite, but he might point out there was no motion before the House upon which a discussion on that point could be raised, as his noble friend simply moved for papers, and he (Lord Kimberley) did not think it would be convenient to enter into a general discussion as to the rules laid down. His noble friend would see, from the papers asked for, that the Governments in India who had been consulted, reported that up to the present time there had been no diminution in the "constitutional robustness" of the civil servants there; but, they added, very fairly, that the time since the alteration had been inadequate to judge of results.

The Marquis of SALISBURY agreed that the present was not a fitting opportunity for discussing a subject with reference to which separate notice ought to be given. He hoped that the terms of the motion would be taken by the noble earl opposite as including the case of engineers coming from Cooper's-hill College.

The Earl of KIMBERLEY replied that he did not think there was any correspondence to produce about the engineers to whom the noble marquis referred. He would, however, make inquiries.

The motion was then agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

LEAVE OF INDIAN OFFICERS.

Mr. BAXTER asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether in future Indian military officers were to be allowed to take their general leave in England on the same terms as it could now be obtained in India, and, consequently, whether the 1875 rule, which provided that the furlough must be spent at some place east of the 40th degree of east longitude was to be abolished.

Mr. J. K. CROSS replied that if his right hon. friend referred to the local leave which, to the extent of six months in each year, might be granted at the discretion of the Indian authorities to officers of the Indian Army who were subject to the furlough rules of 1875, he could only say that there was no intention of altering the limit within which this leave might be taken. (Hear, hear.)

COLONEL G. B. MALLESON, C.S.I.

FINAL FRENCH STRUGGLES IN INDIA AND THE INDIAN SEAS. Including an account of the Capture of the Isles of France and Bourbon. Colonel G. B. MALLESON, C.S.I.
London: By W. H. Allen and Co. 1878

"How India escaped from the government of Prefects and Sub-Prefects to fall under that of Commissioners and Deputy-Commissioners; why the Penal Code of Lord Macaulay reigns supreme instead of a Code Napoleon;
why we are not looking on helplessly from Mahé, Karikal, and Pondicherry, while the French are ruling all over Madras and spending millions of francs in attempting to cultivate the slopes of the Nilgiris, may be learnt from this modest volume. Colonel Malleison is always painstaking and generally accurate; his style is transparent, and he never loses sight of the purpose with which he commenced to write."—Saturday Review

 ONLY ADDRESS IN ENGLAND,

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

 EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION
 OF INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally be practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

A RIDE TO KHIVA

BY CAPTAIN FRED BURNABY,
 Royal Horse Guards.

Says page 13:—"Two pairs of boots lined with fur were also taken; and for physic—with which it is as well to be supplied when travelling in out-of-the-way places—some quinine and Cockle's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the natives of Central Africa with the greatest possible success. In fact, the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him five will never fade from my memory; and a friend of mine, who passed through the same district many months afterwards, informed me that my fame as a 'medicine man' had not died out, but that the marvellous cure was even then a theme of conversation in the bazaar."

JAPAN:TRAVELS AND RESEARCHESUndertaken at the Cost of the Prussian Government.By Prof. J. J. REIN,
Of The University of Marburg.The Times.—"Dr. Rein is an accomplished geographer, and is evidently, besides, a scholar of trained powers and untiring industry. The whole work is compiled on a carefully considered plan, and much of it is really interesting reading. As a compendious reference book it is at present without a rival."Nature.—"It is the best of the many publications upon the subject that have appeared in the last ten years."Daily News.—"This remarkable work has already taken in Germany a high position as a comprehensive study of the whole field of Japanese civilisation, and of the country itself."Sheffield Independent.—"The reader will be amazed at the immense and accurate amount of knowledge he has brought to the accomplishment of his task. The Japanese Government assisted him in the promotion of his undertaking.
This remarkable book deserves very careful study, which it makes easy by its splendidly executed maps and phototypes and the lucid style of the accomplished author."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHS, COLDs, ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 15th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY, GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, LONDON, REPORT that it AOTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBSON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From S. & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-estimated medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaar, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, The Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALEPTATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists, 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURERS, J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, Russell St., W.C.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MARCH 4, 1884.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, Feb. 15; Madras and Allahabad, Feb. 13; Calcutta, Feb. 12.

IF Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Chamberlain have not repented of the shameful Kandahar scuttles, in view of the Russian annexation of Merv, it is clear that Lord Ripon has. The Mémorial Diplomatique of Saturday says that Lord Ripon, Viceroy of India, threatens to resign, unless the Home Government immediately publishes certain documents proving that he urged the acceptance of an offer of an alliance with India made by the Merv Turcomans. According to the same authority, Lord Ripon has demanded permission "to reorganise the interior administration of India, with the view to countermining Russian intrigues amongst the natives."

THE growing heat of Calcutta, and the disinclination of the Viceregal entourage to be inconvenienced by it a moment longer than necessary, are the real reasons (so the Times Calcutta correspondent declares) for the indecent pressure that is being put on the Select Committee of the Legislative Council to hasten its report on the Bengal Tenancy Bill. The Select Committee is forced to meet three times a week, though its non-official members can ill-afford to spare so much time from their professional vocations, and though they are in this way absolutely precluded from giving any effectual or deliberate consideration to the immensely momentous clauses that are being rushed through in this underhand way.

IT is a most unfortunate thing that suspicions of trickery and sharp practice of this sort seem to dog every step of the present régime in India. Those who complain of the present sharp practice—which is said to be further accentuated by the imposition of most unusual restrictions of secrecy on the members—are the recognised representatives of the Native community; those who complained of similar tricks in regard to the "Ilbert Bill No. I." were the recognised representatives of the European community. The sooner that Merv, or any other fiaseo, supplies Lord Ripon with a sufficient inducement to retire, the better will it be for the Empire.

THE rumours of Lord Ripon's impending retirement, of which the air is full both here and in India, derive some little additional weight, from the recent plain speaking in regard to Lord Kimberley and Major Baring, (for Lord Northbrook) that has appeared in the paper that is generally regarded as Lord Ripon's organ in Calcutta. We believe that the Statesman would not say that Lord Kimberley's appointment was a very bad one, and Major Baring's finance, the finance of dotage, unless those opinions were honestly entertained by the writer; but it may not unfairly be assumed, that the prominent assertion of these unpleasant facts is not entirely out of accord with Lord Ripon's present relations with his colleagues at home.

CERTAINLY, if we add up the contempt with which the Viceroy was treated over the question of the Egyptian war charges, and the scorn which was poured on his representations in regard to the Silver Duties, and then compare the total with the respect shown to Mr. Atkins by Lord Kimberley, it must be admitted that the Viceroy's lot is something like that of the policeman in the "Pirates of Penzance." The "discomfort of the Calcutta climate" is said to be sufficient to induce Lord Ripon to play at pitch-and-toss with the Bengal Tenancy Bill: it becomes an interesting inquiry what exact amount of official discomfort will persuade His Excellency that he has "had enough of it."

WHENEVER that time may come, we understand it is now settled that he will be succeeded by the Marquis of Lorne. We have from the first strongly advocated this appointment, both as exceedingly gratifying to Indian loyalty, and as entirely warranted by Lord Lorne's success—all the more real because unattended by the legislative fireworks of the Ripon school—in Canada.

IT is said that, if Lord Ripon comes home soon, as is thought likely, Lord Lorne will go alone to Simla, and will be joined by Her Royal Highness the Princess at the beginning of the cold weather at Bombay, en route for Calcutta.

WAR is still possible, or even probable, between Nepal and Thibet. A weak Governor General in India always means trouble all around our frontier.

WE deeply regret to hear of the dangerous illness of the young Nizam of Hyderabad, who is to-day reported to have cholera; and to be "in a critical state." It would be a sad fatality if the young prince were to follow so soon the lamented Sir Salar Jung, taken by the same fell disorder.

WE have much pleasure in giving prominent insertion to an appeal, made by Mr. Behramji M. Malabari, of 25, Hornby-road, Bombay, Editor of the Indian Spectator, for subscriptions to aid a very deserving lady in carrying out a very worthy object. Mr. Malabari writes:—

"A singular case of the prosecution of study under difficulties has come to my notice. Mrs. Vithabai Sakharani is a Maratha lady favourably known on this side as a school-mistress. As a teacher at the Poona Female Training College, as a Zenana tutor in the service of H.M. the Maharaja of Kolhapore, and as Head Mistress of the Bhowanagar Girls' School, she is believed to have left behind some traces of her humble influence. Mrs. Mitchell, the excellent Lady Superintendent, Poona Training College, thus writes of her, under date April 25, 1883:—'She is a very good teacher and a woman of great energy. She is likely to succeed in whatever she undertakes. She is naturally capable and clever. She knows both English and Gujarati as well as her native tongue' (Marathi). I may also mention that Mrs. Vithabai was invited to give evidence before the Education Commission last year. Mrs. Vithabai some time ago left the Bhowanagar School to study midwifery at the Bombay Grant Medical College. She has passed the examination with the highest credit. But anxious to widen her scope of usefulness, she has now joined the Poona Medical School, where, after a three years' course, she has every prospect of receiving the diploma of medical practitioner. Vithabai is the only female student at the school, and has to study with young men. Her courage and perseverance are beyond praise, but, besides the strain of a student's life at thirty-four, Vithabai has to maintain herself, an aged mother, and two young sisters. She is obliged, therefore, to draw upon her modest savings, and is even prepared to part with a few ornaments rather than give up study. It occurs to me that such patient sacrifice in the pursuit of knowledge deserves a better fate; that while organised efforts are being made to provide Society with women-doctors, individual cases of self-help ought, on no account, to be neglected. Mrs. Vithabai wants only Rs. 1,300 to meet all her wants for three years. And I have undertaken to find her the money. May I venture to appeal to you for a small contribution? I am satisfied, on careful inquiries, that Vithabai is worthy of encouragement, and that such encouragement will make it easier for her to devote her after-life to public usefulness. H.H. the Maharaja of Baroda has contributed Rs. 300 towards the object. We now want only Rs. 1,000, which will be deposited in the Bombay Bank, to be drawn upon month after month. I shall thankfully acknowledge any small donation you can afford."

WE are glad to observe that Mr. Martin Wood, long editor of the Times of India, is republishing some of his Indian journalistic productions in a connected form. Mr. Wood's work will appear in four parts, at 2s. 6d. each, or bound, 3s.; and we hope it will obtain a favourable reception from that section of the public that is interested in Indian affairs.

THE Indian Daily News has the following remarks on the mission of General Gordon:—

"Already we know that Nubia and the Soudan have gone over to the Mahdi as the consequence of his victory over General Hicks at El Obeid; and now, when he appears to be consolidating himself in the territories he has won, and to be preparing a great enterprise which shall cause him to pour the strength and untutored courage of Central Africa upon the valley of the Nile, we find the British Government loath to trust to soldiers—loath to accept a great responsibility—loath to accept the challenge to a war in which faith shall be one of the great factors—and content to send forth one English man to endeavour to stamp out the Mahdi with absolutely nothing but the memory of his justice, his daring, and his extraordinary good luck. This is one of the most wonderful developments of this wonderful age. It reads like a story out of those strange romances of the Middle Ages, where the knight mounts his charger and rides forth upon some great adventure, trusting to his own skill and to the good fortune, which in these romances always awaited upon a true knight. General Gordon, beyond the garrison of Khartoum, should he reach that place in time to find the garrison in existence, or to find it true to the Khedive, would appear to have absolutely no material of war wherewith to enter upon the campaign. If he have to fight, he must first create an army. If he want soldiers, he must first summon them from their fields or from their hills."

OUR contemporary devotes an article to the important bearing of current events in the Soudan on the affairs of India, and advocates strong measures in Abyssinia. It says:—

"The other day we drew attention to the position likely to be forced upon Abyssinia by events in the Soudan. We still think that the English Government would do well to look at matters in a calm and practical light, and to grasp the nettle presented to them by the Mahdi. If the Mahdi is to be conquered, we believe that he must be conquered from the highlands of Abyssinia. The Government of India is interested in this question, because it must, as a matter of course, feel a deep interest in everything affecting the waterway of the Red Sea, and affecting the great road to India. Further, the Government of India possesses a special information as to the political standing and claims of Abyssinia on Egypt, and the prospects of the Abyssinian kingdom. In any question affecting Egypt and Abyssinia, the Government of India ought, in the interests of India especially, and in those of the Empire at large, to speak in no uncertain voice in the counsels of the Cabinet at home."

THE Times of India gives the following obituary for the week ending Feb. 15:—Mr. Henry Lawrence Hutton, District Superintendent of Police, N.W.P.; Lieut. R. A. Baker, squadron officer, 19th Bengal Lancers.

WITH respect to the Freight Market, the Englishman reports as follows:—

"Another week of complete inactivity. Scarcely any business is being proposed either for spot or forward, and we may be said to have arrived at a state of deadlock. Only two vessels have found employment during the week, and our unfixed tonnage has been considerably increased, amounting to nearly 45,000 tons. For London via Suez Canal:—The India and City of Calcutta made further engagements of wheat at 20s., and the Clan Mathewson, City of Khios, filled up with light freight at 30s., 32s. 6d., and 35s. For February loading. —The Armenia and Ashton Hall engaged rapeseed at 37s. 6d., and for March the Vesta and Karamania obtained 40s. This is the only article of export for which there seems to be any inquiry. For April-May loading, the P. and O. liners engaged wheat at 35s., and linseed at 40s. For Liverpool, via Suez Canal.—The Ashton Hall engaged 500 tons Port Canning Rice at 25s. Our unfixed tonnage stands at 45,422 tons.

THE Indigo Market is thus reported upon by Messrs. J. Thomson and Co.:—

"Since our last price current one public sale has been held; this consisted chiefly of small parcels of Native Indigo which met with little inquiry, and sold at easier rates. A few small lots have been disposed of privately, leaving an unsold stock on the spot, of about 1,000 maunds of odds and ends. The season now being virtually at an end, according to our usual custom, we beg to give the following figures showing the probable out-turn of the crop, from which it will be seen that there is an increase on our estimate of 25th September of about 20,000 maunds. No less than 15,000 maunds of this excess is in Native Oude, 2,000 in Native Benares, and 1,000 in Native Bengal; Behar exceeds our estimates by 2,500 maunds, which the fine manufacturing weather at the close of the season would account for. As nearly one half the crop is now produced by natives, it is impossible assist in making our crop estimate; and in giving figures of 25th September, we considered our estimate of the North-West and Benares sufficiently liberal, bearing in mind how unreasonable the weather had been in those districts."

Messrs. William Moran and Co.'s Tea Report is as follows:—

"On the 7th instant 11,644 chests were offered, and 10,90 sold. Common Brokens, Pekoes, Pekoe Souchongs, and Souchongs were steady, but on all other classes there was a fall of about half an anna per pound."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following telegram from the Indian correspondent of the Times is dated Calcutta, March 2:—

"The Bengal Chamber of Commerce has lost no time in following the example of the kindred body at Bombay, and impressing upon the Government the necessity of extending the Indian railway system. It has addressed to the Viceroy a memorial which, while not less strong than that of the Bombay Chamber, is perhaps more likely to command attention, inasmuch as it lays down a less ambitious programme. After quoting figures to show the increase of exports and imports which has followed each extension of the existing trunk lines, the memorial proceeds to point out how small a portion of the whole area of the country is now served by railways, it being a fact that there is on the map of India a single block as large as France within which there is not a single mile of railway.

"On the vexed question of gauge the memorialists say that in the abstract they have no objection to the metre or any other gauge, but they strongly condemn the break of gauge on through trunk lines, and recommend the trunk lines with their connections should be broad gauge while the narrow gauge should be confined to the self-contained areas of the country in which the traffic is likely to be small for some years. They make no suggestions as to the manner in which the capital should be raised, but would be glad to see the Government adhere to the principle of borrowing in the cheapest market. Rupee loans being floated in India to no greater extent than can be absorbed in the country itself without injury to commercial undertakings, they consider that for many years there will be room for both private enterprise and State agency in the construction of new lines, and they recommend that whenever a concession is given to a guaranteed company the interest of the public should be safeguarded by the Government retaining the right to fix the maximum rates for the carriage of cheap staples, and the right of sharing the surplus profits with the company. Finally, they advise that the Indian Government should be entrusted with the power of dealing with railway projects within certain limits, and should have the assistance of a consultative council of mercantile and financial experts. There is now sitting at Calcutta a conference representative of all the principal railways, State and guaranteed, and the following important matters have been settled:—The establishment of a fixed charge on through traffic a uniform rate of insurance on goods, and the division of goods into two great sections. They have also settled a uniform rate for passengers' baggage, and have determined to allow passengers to purchase tickets at any time during the day of starting. It has been agreed, too, that the establishment of a Railway Clearing House for India is desirable.

"The Viceroy leaves Calcutta on the 14th inst., and arrives at Simla on the 22nd; other members of the Government will leave for the Hills about the same time. Two important matters remain to be accomplished before Lord Ripon's departure—namely, the publication of the Budget, which will probably take place about the 14th, and the presentation by the select committee on the Bengal Tenancy Bill of the report and revised Bill. No date is yet announced for that presentation, and it will be a difficult matter for the committee to have their work ready in time, although it is now, and has been for some time, holding three sittings weekly. These long and frequent sittings are excessively inconvenient for non-official members, most of whom can ill afford to spare the time from their professional vocations, and are consequently often obliged to absent themselves. They have protested more than once, but the answer of the Government is that political exigencies require the task to be completed without delay. As it is now admitted that the Bill cannot possibly be passed before next winter, it would have been more honest and truthful to have said that the increasing heat of the weather makes the Government anxious to get away to Simla as soon as possible. There is no reason, save the discomfort of the Calcutta climate, why Lord Ripon and the Council should not remain here a month or two longer, so as to allow the committee to finish their work at leisure, and with the full benefit of the assistance of independent members.

"As at present arranged, the Viceroy will formally close the Calcutta Exhibition on the 10th inst. As the closing day approaches the number of visitors increases, and it seems clear

Mr. Joubert. Indeed, he has given practical proof of this by proposing to hold an Exhibition at Bombay next winter. The proposal was referred by the Government to the Bombay Commissioners for the Calcutta Exhibition, but they decided to reject it on the ground that the time for preparation was not sufficient. There can be no doubt of the wisdom of this decision. The Calcutta Exhibition has suffered much by the haste with which it was got up, and a similar show at Bombay, eight months hence, would have necessarily been a mere imperfect reproduction of the one now closing here.

"The official report of the engineer of the Port Commissioners on the burning of the oil-laden ship Aurora, in the Hooghly, which accident I mentioned last week, shows clearly how narrowly the shipping in the port escaped total destruction. After describing the efforts made to prevent the flames spreading, he adds, 'But had it been a strong flood tide, all our efforts would have been in vain, and a floating mass of fire and smoke would have been among the shipping in about a quarter of an hour. We had everything in our favour—a weak tide and a northerly wind. A strong flood tide and a westerly wind would have destroyed the whole shipping in the port.' Little damage was done beyond the destruction of the vessel and cargo—a loss which will not have been in vain if it moves the authorities to the speedy providing of more secure accommodation for kerosene-laden ships.

"Negotiations are still pending between Nepal and Thibet. The Nepanlese army is ready for war, but as no restriction is laid upon the emigration of labourers to India it would seem that an early outbreak of hostilities is not apprehended. The British Resident at Khatmandu lately visited Calcutta, and doubtless discussed the situation with the Viceroy. It seems likely that should the parties be unable to come to terms the Indian Government may offer to communicate with China on the subject.

"Sir R. Sandeman, accompanied by the chief Sirdars of South Western Beloochistan, arrived at Gwadur on the 20th ult. The Arab Governor came out some distance to meet him and fired a salute on his arrival.

"The settlement of pending questions connected with the protection of the Indo-Persian telegraph was arranged. The Khan of Khelat has accepted the responsibility of protecting the line, and the employes. Sir R. Sandeman and the troops sailed from Gwadur on the 22nd, and on its arrival at Kurrachee the expedition was broken up. The Bombay troops escorting the mission behaved admirably in trying circumstances. The expedition may fairly be said to have accomplished its object, and to have been completely successful from first to last."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

LIFE OF THE HON. MOUNTSTUART ELPHINSTONE.* THIS excellent and valuable book ought to be doubly welcome. Persons connected with India will be glad to have an account of the training and conduct of one of the greatest of that band of statesmen by whom the Indian Empire was formed, Munro, Malcolm, Metcalfe, have all long since obtained due biographic record; and it was high time that he, who was the wisest of them all, should be honoured with a monument. But there was an additional reason for a life of Elphinstone. Those whose interest in India is as indirect and faint as is too common with "the general reader," ought still to receive with pleasure an account of a man who, though a gentleman by birth, had received hardly any education when young; who was, mentally, as much a self-made man as any of Dr. Smiles's heroes; and who, pursuing the paths of scholarship through all the combined trials of an enervating climate, a protracted exile, and a life of agitating public cares, was widely read in the literature of many ages, places, tongues, and left to posterity a historical work which is never likely to be superseded or surpassed.

Mountstuart Elphinstone was born in Scotland in 1779, a cadet of an old and noble family. After a little rough and rudimentary schooling, he was sent to India in the Civil Service, and landed in Calcutta on the 26th Feb., 1796. In speaking of Lord Wellesley's efforts to instruct the young civilians, Mr. T. Colebrooke is somewhat hard to the training from which so many of these officers afterwards received their culture. "The generous endeavour," he says, "to secure to the service a high standard of culture has only been secured in recent times." If by "recent times" he meant those succeeding the transfer of the Government from the Court of Directors, the sentence is worse than an exaggeration. The Directors were never wanting—when once their college at Haileybury was opened—in "generous endeavours to secure a high standard." The professors at that institution—Mackintosh, Stephen, Jeremie, and others, were men of great eminence; and some of the pupils turned out there achieved much higher distinction in regard to intellectual pursuits than has been yet reached by any of the men of competition. It is true that in Elphinstone's days Haileybury had not been established; yet even in his case, one sees that a young man who has not been worried with teaching in his youth may sometimes show a love for books, in after life, all the more keen and true because books have never been made instruments for torturing his boyhood.

After a short probation, during which he travelled over parts of Orissa and the Deccan, Elphinstone took part in the great Campaign of Arthur Wellesley, whose secretary he was. Naturally of an enterprising and chivalric nature, he was in the thick of the fights of Assai and Argaum, and in the storm of Gawilgash. When peace—such as it was—ensued, he went to Nagpur as Resident at the Court of Raghujee Bhonola, was transferred thence to the Court of Daulat Rao Sindhia, and in 1808 proceeded as Ambassador Extraordinary to Cabul. For the next few years he was Resident at the Court of the Peshwa at Puna; and in 1817 was the conductor of a skilful defence when the Maharrattas turned rusty, and made their desperate attack upon the Residency. In 1819 came the final settlement of the Maharratta territories, and Elphinstone's farewell to the Deccan. He then obtained the Governorship of Bombay on the retirement of Sir Evan Nepean.

This appointment was made on the recommendation of George Canning, then President of the Board of Control, who supported the departure from the ordinary practice of appointing "persons of eminence in this country," by the following generous sentence:—

"The extraordinary zeal and ability which have been displayed by so many of the company's servants, civil and military, in the course of the late brilliant and complicated war, and the peculiar situation in which the results of that war have placed the affairs of your Presidency at Bombay, appear to constitute a case in which any deviation from the general practice in favour of your service might be at once becoming and expedient."

In the administration of the Western Presidency Mr. Elphinstone displayed a calm and judicious wisdom which fully justified Mr. Canning's confidence. He codified the criminal law, initiated measures for training natives for the public service, put the general question of education on a sound basis, and laid down his government in 1827, amid the most genuine and universal expressions of respect and gratitude from all classes.

He never again took any part in public life. Though twice offered the Governor Generalship, and solicited to go to Canada, he steadily adhered to the life of literary retirement, which was, in spite of all his ability and public spirit, the ideal of his warmest feelings. His seat at Hookwood, near Limpstone, became a sort of Indian Delphi, where nascent Indian statesmen and anxious English ministers alike resorted for oracles. From 1834 to 1841 he was also engaged in his "History of India," which, though never completed, is much more than a fragment, being a model of concise treatment in regard to all the long period over which its view extends.

Mr. Elphinstone's health was never good. By great care, by temperance and exercise, he avoided great illnesses, and prolonged his life to a period above the estimate of the Psalmist. Early in 1859 his faculties began to decay; and on Nov. 20 of that year he ended painlessly in the merciful coma of paralysis.

He was of liberal views, both in politics and religion. His philosophy was rather that of the old Roman stories, Juvenal and Epictetus, than of any more modern school. He disliked oriental poetry, with which he was well acquainted, on account of its pessimism—making, however, an exception in favour of Umr Khayyam, who has since then been made so popular by Mr. Edward Fitzgerald. He failed to understand the position of Goethe in modern thought; doubting whether he was superior to Leibnitz, or would ultimately leave a deeper mark. His advice and criticism in regard to the history of the Mughal Empire which his friend Erskine had begun is, however, full of sound wisdom, and his estimate of Miller's "History of India" especially deserves attention. He found fault with the author for going into controversy rather than giving results, and pointed out—what is an unpardonable defect—the want of sympathy with great thoughts and noble actions.

Taken for all in all, Elphinstone was what Allen Cunningham called him, "a right-judging man," and a splendid product of the great formative power of Anglo-Indian administration.

GENERAL SKOBELEFF.*

A MEMOIR of the fiery and daring Russian general, who in the course of but a few years gained a name known and respected throughout the world, who but for his early death would doubtless have been a second Suwarrow, cannot fail to be full of interest to Englishmen. The writer of the book was a Russian war-correspondent in 1877, and his admiration of the hero and his doings undoubtedly seem overwrought to cold English imagination; but it is valuable to note the enthusiasm aroused, and to try to comprehend the power which it gave to the general over those under his command, so that he alone was able at Plevna to lead on his men again and again to the attack of entrenchments from which veritable hailstorms of lead were driving over the open ground.

The work in English reads like an excellent translation, that is, it seems, to retain the full flavour of the original, while at the same time the meaning is never obscure. There is one part of the book that will have great interest for us—that which details the feelings of Skobelev at the diplomatic check which the Russians received at Adrianople when they were in hopes to continue their victorious march to Constantinople. He, himself, was of course strongly for pushing on into Constantinople at all risks of war, and seems to have come to the conclusion that the English were really afraid to go to war, because they were unprepared for it. That might be, but he overlooked or disregarded Lord Beaconsfield's dictum, that England is the only nation in Europe that can go to war for five years. Nations that employ the conscription have the advantage of enormous armies at the outset, but the war must be rapid. A lingering war such as England might force on would cause a mutiny, or revolution, or both combined in any nation relying on conscription for its armies. With regard to the Akhal Tekke campaign, there is unfortunately little in the book, which deals mainly with the Plevna campaign, of which the author was an eye-witness. A complete account of Skobelev's wonderful campaign in Khokand, or Ferghana, as the Russians prefer to call it, and against the Turcomans would be very valuable.

MILITARY LAW.*

SEVERAL small works on military law have been brought out lately, but the work by Major Cochran seems about the best. It is printed in bold, clear type, with references given for every assertion; and above all, has a comprehensive index. It will be observed that Major Cochran, where practicable, uses English terms, and calls his book a "handy book," and not a "manual."

"BURDETT'S OFFICIAL INTELLIGENCE FOR 1884."*

Mr. HENRY BURDETT's useful book of reference is the fourth of its series that assist at providing yearly and complete information about financial and commercial undertakings, companies, and stocks. Such a book is indispensable not only to stockbrokers and financial agents, but to all secretaries of stock and share companies; for if doing one's own work well is one of the first duties in life, knowing what others are doing is one of the secondary duties. Investors and promoters, as well as initiators of undertakings are too often so wrapped in their own schemes, that they do not even inquire about the failures and causes of failure of many other similar schemes, and sometimes even are unaware of such attempts. The investing public will hence find this book useful.

The part of it most valuable to them treats of Colonial securities, on which subject the information is remarkably full and thorough, and perhaps cannot be equally well obtained in detail from any other source, certainly not in the mass.

The inhabitant of any country naturally first seeks to invest his accumulations in his own land, in the national funds, or in undertakings in which his friends are interested, having opportunities for supervision, and for watching progress; but when all such investments become practically impossible, the next wish is to invest in the funds or the undertakings of the colonies of his own country. To do this, it is necessary to make oneself well informed about them.

There is another class of undertakings about which special information is also necessary to the investor, those involving engineering works, such as new railways, canals, docks, water-works, and tramways. Much knowledge may be gained by comparing the conditions of new undertakings with those of older ones.

To those that enter newly into mining enterprise, some of the records of fluctuation of value in mining shares will be useful in making them understand the limits of the risks they are facing.

The Acts and Bills of the year and session, are dealt with in the introductory summary of the book; some of these brief notices are, perhaps, too meagre, but when we consider the labour of compilation and of condensation, we feel thankful that any one has done it all for us.

THE "ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE."

THE Army and Navy Magazine for March opens with an account of the battle of Fehrbellin—not a very generally well-known battle, though entitled to be so from the strategic and tactical skill shown in it, and that the victory formed the foundation of Prussia's greatness. In an article on "New American Cruisers" the writer considers that the importance of these ships has been over-rated; there is no special novelty about the type, although there are several interesting novelties about the construction, such as the employment of beam engines to drive twin screws. Mr. Hooper commences a series of articles on "Pepys as an Official." Pepys's diary has been much drawn on for information as to the social life of his time, but it also contains much information of his official dealings at the Navy Office and the Admiralty, which is much less generally known. In a review of Holmes's "Indian Mutiny" Mr. Morgan Fenwolf points out, among other things, the shameful way in which Forrett who "saved Bombay" has been treated. Col. Judge on "The Present State of the Army," advocates the formation of two armies, one of short service for home duties and occasional or European campaigns, and one of longer service for duty abroad and to strengthen with its veterans the stamina of the home army. The tendency of military opinion has for some time been setting in this direction, and Colonel Judge's statements will be found of interest and value. In a short article entitled "Sitting on the Safety Valve," Mr. Keene points out that the increase of population in England has been so rapid that it can only be dealt with by arranged emigration. The novel, by Mrs. Phillips, of "Man Proposes" will be found to retain its interest.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ARROW GANGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In paragraph 13 of the Resolution of the Government of India, P.W.D., on the proposed Assam Railway (see pages 190 and 191 of your paper of the 20th inst), the Viceroy expresses his high satisfaction that Mr. Buyers has found a valley through which a railroad can be taken from Cachar into the valley of the Brahmaputra.

And yet this valley through which the river Jatinga flows is not of new formation; it must have been known to geographers in the seventeenth century.

Now, if any young engineer of Egham College be desirous of distinguishing himself, let him bring to the notice of Government the existence of the Arrow Ganges or Weingunga River; it takes its rise in the Seonee district, and flows northward about two miles west of the town of Seonee. When it reaches latitude 21 deg. 24 min. it turns eastward, and on being joined by the Thour in longitude 80 deg. 7 min., flows southward, and passes under the Calcutta-Nagpur Railway east of Toomsur. For the purpose of connecting Jubbulpore with that railway, no line can be better than the Arrow Ganges line, but the road would leave the river at Bhoora, and passing through the towns of Hattuh and Kompta, join the Calcutta railroad at Ambgaon, eighty-eight miles east of Nagpur.

Compare this line with that proposed by Government, from Sohagpore to Ruttunpore, on which, at Pendra, the plain rises to 1,980 feet above the sea.—Your obedient servant, T. Feb. 22.

INDIAN STUDENTS IN LONDON.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I am sending you a copy of an extract from the Madras Times, and shall be thankful if you can find room for it in your paper, at least, for a part of it, that relating to the temptations which Indian students are exposed to in London. I trust my own experience of Indian student life in London will be a warning to many who risk a few years' stay in the metropolis. —Yours faithfully, S. SATTHIANADHAN.

Blackwood, Ootacamund, Feb. 9.

(EXTRACT FROM "THE MADRAS TIMES," JAN. 30.)

MR. SATTHIANADHAN, B.A., LL.B., headmaster of Breek's Memorial School, Ootacamund, and a graduate of Cambridge University, writes:—

The earnest efforts of Professor Monier. Williams have at last been crowned with success. The Indian Institute at Oxford is to be opened in June next, and will, it is to be hoped, prove a real bond of union between the East and the West. The proud structure will soon be completed, and stand by the side of the venerable buildings of that great university, each one of which is endeared to the English nation by many an old association. The Indian student, too, who crossing many seas goes to the time-honoured university to share its much coveted life, will look with pride upon this edifice and regard it as a token of the goodwill and true sympathy on the part of the English towards his own people and country. And to Professor Monier. Williams is due the honour of having originated, and succeeded in nearly carrying out, an undertaking so liberal and so purely unselfish in its objects. He had much opposition at first, no less a person than Professor Max Muller being strongly opposed to the scheme when it was brought before the members of the Senate. For the past seven years he has been unceasing in his efforts to secure the patronage and support of both Englishmen and natives of India, and he may well be proud of the results. The Prince of Wales laid the foundation stone of the institute, which has also won the hearty sympathy of the Queen-Empress, and the leading politicians of the day. Here, in India, nearly all the princes and chiefs supported the undertaking liberally.

The object of the institute is to give "effective and trustworthy teaching in all subjects relating to India; to encourage Indian resources, and to concentrate and disseminate correct ideas on Indian matters." It is also to be the home of the Indian students at the University, and as the professor says, "It will become a place for the interchange of qualities as well as knowledge; a place for forming the character as well as informing the mind." Young Indians will there be brought into contact with young Englishmen, and derive from them "a little of that bone and fibre which constitute the strength of character. And young Englishmen, on the other hand, will see in young Indians many qualities worthy of their imitation, such as patience, courtesy of manner, and obedience to authority." The Indian students connected with the Institute will be looked after by the Director, and their moral and mental progress will also be attended to.

The Viceroy, in his speech, speaking of the superior advantages of a training in Oxford, alluded to the dangers and temptations which students are exposed to in London. May I be allowed to say a few words on this point, having had the experience of a student in an English University for more than four years? Oxford and Cambridge are not so much sought after as places of education by Indian students, as London. To about every 100 students in London, either studying for the bar or for other professions, such as medicine, engineering, &c., there are at present about twelve in Cambridge, and only half that number in Oxford. More than 50 per cent. of the students who go over to England qualify themselves for the bar; for the mere reason that it is the easiest of all professions, and at the same time the most paying in India. Thirty-three per cent. of the students study medicine, and these find a four years' course in London or Edinburgh far cheaper than that in Oxford or Cambridge. Those students who go to England merely for the sake of a training in an English university, without any view to taking up a profession, form less than a third of the whole number. Cambridge has been drawing a larger number of Indian students to itself than Oxford, since they have had greater encouragement given them there. It was only last year that Oxford gave the opinion to Indian students of substituting Sanskrit or Arabic for Greek; whereas in Cambridge this privilege was granted to them three years ago. I may as well mention here that the Madras Presidency is very poorly represented among the Indian students in England. About residence in London, I think it is imprudent for Indian students to live in London for a number of years without proper friends to take care of them. I have known young men who have been leading the most reckless lives in that great metropolis, squandering their money, and giving in easily to all the debasing temptations of that city, instead of making the best use of their time as students. Most of these young men, who go over to England for their education, are promising young men, and would distinguish themselves in the English Universities if only they gave their time and attention to their books. But the state of things is otherwise with them in London. I won't say with all of them, but with most of them. The nights are spent in either the theatre or the music-hall, and the morning hours before the college lectures commence, in loafing about Oxford or Regent Streets. It is a dangerous life which one is exposed to in London, and I have known more than two young men, who, at the commencement of their course, gave promise of a brilliant university career, but who, after spending thrice the amount which a student need spend in England, were obliged to return, content with ordinary degrees. Life in London is too exciting and tempting for a student, and unless he is under the influence of proper friends he would run the risk of ruining himself and acquire habits which he would find anything but enjoyable in the long run. Very few Indian students distinguish themselves in London. Take for instance, the Indian barristers who are now turned out by the dozen. I remember an English barrister telling me that not even five out of a hundred Indian students attempt to study for honours; and to get through the bar examinations without honours is not quite a herculean task. I only wish here to point out the disadvantage in studying in London, where the distractions and temptations easily upset a student who is not strong-minded. In Oxford or Cambridge the Indian student is safer, he is under discipline, not, of course, that school-boy discipline which young men detest; but it is that wholesome restraint which, without infringing the liberty of the student, keeps him at some time steady. This new institute, therefore, where both the moral progress of the student will be attended to, and where he will be subject to the influence of experienced and learned men, will make Oxford additionally attractive to the Indian youths."

IMPORTANT MEETING AT BHAGALPUR TO OPPOSE THE TENANCY BILL.

BHAGALPUR, FEB. 2.

An influential meeting of the landholders of the division was held here to-day; Rajah Pudmanund Sing presiding. The following resolutions were passed:—

Moved by Mr. G. H. Grant, seconded by M. B. Morrison, and supported by Baboo Tarini Prosad—"That this meeting is grateful to His Excellency the Viceroy in Council for publishing the official opinions on the Bengal Tenancy Bill, and is of opinion that the views expressed by the Government of Bengal in its minute on the said Bill are, in many respects, unsound and incorrect; and this meeting regrets that the Government of Bengal should have adopted such erroneous views on such a momentous question as the land question in Bengal and Behar."

Moved by Mr. Thomas Grant, seconded by Baboo Tez Narain, and supported by Baboo Charoo Chunder Mitter—"That it be respectfully brought to the notice of the Government, that the present Bill will seriously depreciate the value of property held by the zemindari and other landholders of Bengal and Behar, and will consequently reduce and cripple their means of maintaining or contributing to the support of institutions and objects of public utility."

Moved by Mr. St. Clair Grant, seconded by Baboo Bhupon Chunder Rai—"That in view of its great importance to the landed classes, His Excellency the Viceroy in Council be respectfully requested to publish for general information, in English and in the Vernacular, the Bengal Tenancy Bill as it may be amended by the Select Committee, and to grant sufficient time to the public for the consideration of the amended Bill."

Moved by Baboo Poorna Chunder Sind, seconded by Munshi Shujayet Ali Khan—"That a memorial be submitted to His Excellency the Viceroy in Council embodying the resolutions passed at this meeting, and that it be forwarded with the signature of the chairman of this meeting."

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

EDUCATION IN BHAGALPUR IN 1882-83.

It is a matter of joy that education continues to make satisfactory progress in Bengal. The Director's Report on public instruction for 1882-83 shows a gain within the last six years of no less than 47,410 in the number of schools submitting returns to the Department, and of 721,741 in the number of pupils. The total number of pupils now reported to be at school is in round numbers a million-and-a-quarter. The system of primary education has remarkably expanded in recent years. An additional grant of one lakh was made for primary education during the year under report, and the total amount available for expenditure on this kind of instruction was raised to six lakhs. The number of primary schools increased during the past year by over 23 per cent. The Government expenditure on primary education rose at the same time from Rs. 478,000 to Rs. 581,000, and the contributions from private sources amounted to 18½ lakhs against 15¼ lakhs in the previous year. The time has come for considering whether the system of primary education should be further extended in the province. We are glad to see that this important point is ably dealt with in the Lieutenant Governor's Resolution on the Director's Report. His Honour emphatically recognises the necessity for care and watchfulness in the administration of the grant for primary education, so as to secure from it the utmost benefit to the people. It is clear that a considerable part of the grant has hitherto been spent in such a way as to do no corresponding good. The resolution says: "There is a strong probability that if the statistics, indeed, represent in all cases schools actually in existence, very many of these schools were started within the year, or very shortly before, and facts stated in the report suggest the doubt whether such schools possess any stability, or are really fulfilling any useful function in the educational system of the country." These facts should receive the careful and attentive consideration of the philanthropists, who are so enthusiastically advocating the extension and development of the system of primary education. In the district of Midnapore the number of primary schools has largely increased within the last few years. Mr. Wilson, magistrate of that district, plainly admits that the statistics of schools and scholars annually submitted regarding the progress of primary education are almost entirely valueless, as they do not furnish trustworthy information on this point. He states that some of the patshalas which compete at sub-centre examinations are only opened for a few weeks, that many of the gurus are quite incapable of imparting any useful instruction, and that the returns submitted by gurus of the average monthly roll number, and the average daily attendance are not correct. This is the conclusion to which Mr. Wilson has come after having devoted considerable attention to patshala statistics during the past year; and the Director himself says: "It has been stated on unquestionable authority that in districts where the reward examinations are held only once in the cold weather, temporary patshalas spring up and are closed as soon as the examinations are over." The significance of this admission made by the head department cannot be over-estimated. In some districts the primary school system has received an extension which is not demanded by the requirements of the people. Mr. Hopkins, magistrate of Tipperah, who was for some years an inspector of schools, observes:—"I am not quite satisfied that all these schools are essential to the educational requirements of the district. The number of schools gives one school to every 400 of the population; of these, say 200 are females; this gives, leaving out female education, one school to every 200 of the male population. The male population of school-going age is not more than 25 per cent., if so much. Again, considering the matter from a geographical point of view, and taking the area of the district at 2,000 square miles, exclusive of bheels and jungle, there are two schools to every square mile. From this point of view I think there is a possibility that there is waste of power, and many of these schools are ill-attended, and located injuriously near to each other." Mr. Hopkins does not hesitate to say that if the schools were reduced by one half no harm would be done, and he has called the attention of the inspecting agency of his district to the necessity of discouraging any further development of the number of schools. The Lieutenant Governor is of the same opinion. While disclaiming a wish to discourage the establishment of new schools in districts where their number is still small in comparison with the extent of country and population, his Honour declares in plain and emphatic terms that in many districts the development of the system of primary education has already reached, if it has not in some actually exceeded, the extreme limit compatible with sound administration, and it is desirable that in these districts there should be no further extension for some years. The decision at which Mr. Rivers Thompson has arrived will commend itself to the common sense of the thinking portion of the community, who are not led away by the taking cry of mass education. It would be sheer waste of public money to increase the number of primary schools until the existing ones have been made efficient and useful institutions. We are of opinion that attention should now be directed to the promotion of efficiency.

There is not much in the history of secondary and University education during the past year which calls for any particular notice. The number of Government schools for secondary education has remained stationary. The Lieutenant Governor regrets that no local body has yet come forward to undertake the management of a zillah school. But his Honour forgets that the time has not yet come when zillah schools in the Mofussil could be made over to private gentlemen. Mr. Rivers Thompson is greatly mistaken in thinking that the marked success which has attended the establishment of unaided colleges in Calcutta is a guarantee that zillah schools would continue to be as successful and as useful to the people without Government management. In the Mofussil the agency is not so efficient. The transfer of any zillah school to private gentlemen will, in the present circumstances of the country, prove seriously detrimental to the interests of education; and for that reason the measure would go against the principles laid down in the despatch of 1854. The framers of that despatch no doubt, looked forward to the time when it would be possible for Government to withdraw from the field of higher education; but at the same time they deprecated any action which might abandon a single institution to decay. Strange to say, while Mr. Rivers Thompson attaches so much importance to the encouragement of private enterprise in education, his Honour has allowed the law classes of the Presidency College to be kept up for another year. The number of students in those classes has, owing to the competition of the Metropolitan Institution and the City College, dwindled from 121 to 11; and yet they will be maintained for another twelve months at a considerable expenditure in the hope of an adequate increase taking place in the number of students. The number of Government colleges during the year was twelve as in the previous year, that of aided colleges five, and that of unaided colleges six. The number of college students shows an increase of 268 per cent. in the last nine years; but the increase has chiefly taken place in the unaided colleges of Calcutta, the Metropolitan Institution being the most largely attended of them. The Director observes that the large number of students found at these institutions "not only justifies their existence, but shows that they came into existence because there was a need for them." The fee-rates in the Presidency college are so high that very few persons can afford to pay them. From a table of the means, social position, and occupation of the parents and guardians of the pupils at the various classes of schools given in the Director's report, it appears that the vast majority of our students belong to the poorer classes. In the number of female schools and pupils there was a considerable increase during the past year, which was also rendered memorable by two of the pupils of the Bethune School taking the B.A. degree. We notice that the total expenditure of the Department, exclusive of the cost of the unaided Colleges of Calcutta and Burdwan, was, in round numbers 75½ lakhs, of which the Government contributed 30½ lakhs. The total cost of education (inclusive of expenditure on school building) borne by the Government fell from 41·3 per cent., in 1881-82 to 40·4 in the past year.—Hindoo Patriot.

THE AGITATION IN BENGAL AGAINST THE TENANCY BILL.

The agitation, in the shape of public meetings of landholders, to protest against the Bengal Tenancy Bill continues as strong as ever. The measure appears to have been an ill-advised and unnecessary attempt to undermine vested rights. Resolutions have been embodied at a public meeting in Bhagulpore, to convey disapproval of the views of the Bengal Government as expressed in a recent minute. Further, that it be brought to the notice of the Government that this proposed Bill will seriously depreciate the value of Zemindaree properties, and reduce and cripple their means of maintaining and contributing to the support of institutions, and objects of public utility. The more the Bill is scrutinised, the more pernicious, and uncalled for do its provisions appear. It was probably a fortuitous incident in connection with the recent agitation against the Ilbert Bill, that the Bengal Tenancy Bill was a conterminous proposition. It helped to knit together the resentment of the two classes concerned, however different a base may have originated the feeling. Of a certainty it tended to weaken the ostensible pretext for race equalisation put forward in the one instance.—Indian Daily News.

PLANTING OPINION ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL. The Radical mind is essentially iconoclastic and child-like, desirous of opportunity and excuse for breaking something, toys to-day perhaps, tables and chairs probably the day after to-morrow. Vires acquirit eundo this restless love for destruction, and unfortunately for the Commonwealth there is no satisfying it. A bull in a China shop is not more insatiable in desire for mischief and a new sensation, and not much higher in the social scale, regarded as a responsible agent. Withal, the Radical mind inclines to prefer crooked ways to straight ones, and people who have a habit of saying what they mean, and doing what they say they will do, get puzzled and mystified very often in their intercourse and business dealings with men who, like Mr. Gladstone, can see so many sides of a subject that they never remember which one they have seen last and pinned their faith to, or men like the Marquis of Ripon who have no ideas beyond the pale of subserviency to a political party. The mischief is that such men are set to rule over us, and for our own sakes, therefore, we must needs try and find out what they really mean, if they have any meaning at all, and in what direction their acts and intentions really tend. Amongst thinking men just now a conviction seems to be gaining ground that the Ilbert Bill was, after all said and done, a dummy, a dead horse, got up very cleverly and artistically, but a dead horse for all that. Under cover of the excitement and indignation aroused by it, the promoters of the Bengal Tenancy Bill proposed to themselves to rush their communistic measure through the Council, the force of public opinion being meanwhile diverted to a side-issue, so to speak, but a side-issue so fateful and full of momentous consequences, that no Englishman domiciled in India, who believed in the desire of the Indian Government to make it into law, could afford to ignore. In an article written not very long ago we denounced that proposed new Rent Law, and gave reasons for the faith in us that it ought to be denounced. We are glad to find educated public opinion in England backing up that faith and our arguments. Several meetings, attended by ex-officials and other men who have lived in India, and are in a position to discourse about its material condition and prospects with some authority, have been held lately in various towns in the old country to protest against the proposed Bengal Tenancy Bill: a communistic measure, which in the fitness of things, ought surely to have emanated from Paris, and to have been godmothered by Louise Michel and revolutionary people of that ilk, for its thoroughly communistic in scope and tendency. It shamelessly abandons and sets at naught contracts deliberately and advisedly entered into nearly a century ago between Government and the Zemindars. It utterly ignores agreements entered into between man and man since that time. It makes no pretence even to morality, but finds its raison d'être in a supposed convenience. We wonder that it has not occurred to its authors and the people who favour it to declare that the payment of rent in any shape or fashion is an anomaly, and one which may no longer be countenanced or endured. Perhaps they will before very long. They have to all intents and purposes said so as regards Ireland, and we are constantly being reminded of similarities of Land Tenure and Rent Law, or rather "No Rent" Law, between Ireland and India. Meanwhile we are very glad indeed that the Ilbert Bill has collapsed, not only because it was an iniquitous piece of legislation and threatened the liberties and rights of Anglo-Indians, but also because the agitation in connection with it exposed the Anglo-Indian community to risk of forgetfulness on the part of the public to the dangerous scope and tendency of the proposed new Rent Law. Happily that risk has now been removed, and all our energies can be concentrated on withstanding and exposing the fallacies that underlie Ilbert Bill No. 2. It only remains for us and for all well-wishers to the good of the Anglo-Indian community, to the rights of property and the maintenance of English traditions of law and fair play, to be constant in watchfulness over a very despotically inclined Radical Government, and careful always to keep the public informed, as far as us lies, about novel Radical departures and subversions of the old order of things. As Mr. H. Bell said recently, "Wherever we look we see signs of reckless legislation, the outcome of speculative theories and misguided sentiment. Your rights are now being invaded; and when you see other sections of the community assailed, will you turn your back upon them in the struggle or give them your sympathy and support? The time has come when every man who has a privilege to lose or property to defend, should unite for their mutual defence."

That is the chief and most essential moral to be deduced by wise men from all the Radical haste, to push on the due time for a Socialist millennium of a sort, which is unfortunately so prevalent nowadays, and which in the hands of men with fads like Lord Ripon, when they get vested with brief authority, are so powerful for mischief to the commonalty. The immediate moral we desire to impress upon our readers is a constant distrust of Radical fads as applies to the practice of Indian Government and a rational disbelief in their pertinacity of application to such a proved and well-seasoned Conservative country as India. What we may call the instinct of caste is stronger, and seems likely to be for many years yet to come, more powerful, than the Brummagem Radical notions which so many men, who ought surely to know better, are striving to engraft on the Hindoo mind and character. The pity is that the said Hindoo character, when catechised by men of local influence and authority, has a tendency to limpness, and as a rule has not at command sufficient strength of mind to contradict or controvert official opinions, or to tender its own in lieu thereof. Whereby the Radical platform is advantaged—and it always knows very well how to turn its adventitious advantages to practical account.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

ALTHOUGH the proceedings of the Select Committee on the Rent Bill are not disclosed to the public, it is generally known that the Committee is meeting frequently, and that the clauses of the Bill are being discussed. A contemporary stated that the Lieutenant Governor had recommended a roving commissioner to be appointed for the purpose of ascertaining how far the Bill, as amended in Committee, would work in the various districts. On the principle, that half a loaf is better than no bread, it is to be hoped that before the Bill of the Select Committee is laid before the Council some such an inquiry may be undertaken. At present we would ask the most extreme partisan of the Rent Bill upon what evidence is legislation being carried on? There is no such evidence in existence. If the opinions of officials who have been consulted by the present Government are to be accepted, there is every reason for the abandonment of the present Bill altogether. If, on the other hand, it is thought necessary to amend the existing law, and there can be but little doubt that some amendment is necessary, then it is desirable that some inquiry should be directed as to how and in what direction the amendment should take place.

The appointment of a commission to see how far the amended Bill is suited to local requirements is, it is true, something like the quest of the Prince in Cinderella to find out whom the glass slipper would fit. We fear, however, that no Cinderella will be found in this instance. However, it would be desirable to have such a commission appointed, were it only to show those who legislate on theory that their theories do not apply universally. This kind of commission should, however, have preceded and not succeeded the deliberations of a Select Committee. When a measure has been condemned, as the Rent Bill has been condemned, by such a large number of well-informed officials, one would have thought that a pause would have been made; but the contrary is the case. The measure is being hurried on, and the opinions of old experienced officers of Government disregarded. We ask still that a commission be appointed to examine the question locally. Let its members go round the various districts, giving every one a hearing; let them ask individual ryots in their fields or at the hāt whether they want a Rent Bill or whether they would prefer to be left alone, let them call for and examine Jummabundi papers, and let them expose in every way they can the iniquities which are now asserted take place on every zemindar in Bengal, and, when they have collected their facts, let Government say how far remedial legislation is desirable. This inquiry should not stop at private zamindars' estates. It should be pursued in the Khas Mehals and estates managed under the Court of Wards, and the entire conditions of agricultural life in Bengal should be made public. At present legislation is going on in the dark. The Select Committee cannot possibly know the circumstances of each district, and without that knowledge, legislation on a satisfactory basis is impossible. There is not the slightest reason why it should be hurried. The most conservative zemindar will accept the fact that the law requires adjustment, and the most extreme partisan of the ryot must admit that, if this adjustment is to be fair, it must be made after due enquiry.

It is unprecedented in the history of modern civilisation that, because a few members of a debating club (for the Rent Law Commission was nothing more or less) thought that the entire social economy of a country was wrong, legislation should immediately take place to set it right in accordance with the opinions of the members. We have every respect for the opinions of the present proprietary school. The men who compose that school are earnest and clever men. We claim, at the same time, an equal respect for the opinions of those who differ from the tenets of that school. We ask that the point at issue be subjected to the test which is employed to decide every question in every day life, the test of facts as gathered from experience and evidence. If this test be honestly employed, as we are sure it would be by any commission appointed by Government to gather information from the various districts, we are not afraid of any Rent Bill which would be based upon that information. What we consider the danger of the present Bill is, that it is founded on the ideas of one or two men. It is not the result of inquiry, and it accepts as facts a description of things which its opponents declare to have no existence. If the advocates of the Rent Bill are assured that a fearful state of things exists in Bengal, in view of which it is unsafe to allow men to enter into contracts with each other, they can surely have no objection to see their position established by evidence. Should they shrink from enquiry, they must hold the public excused if it declines to accept their fact, and stigmatises their legislation as based upon theory and nothing else. Men whose work lies amongst the people and whose experience has been wide and of long standing, assert that there is nothing in the condition of agricultural relations in Bengal to call for a measure of redistribution of property. Those who think so court the fullest inquiry, and would welcome legislation based upon that inquiry. We object, however, to legislation formulated upon the ideas of a few members of the Rent Commission and those of the officials consulted who agree with them. We object to see the property of any section of the community sacrificed to please the ideas of statesmen who consider that the land is the property of the people, and not of those who have bought it or inherited it. The country has progressed and prospered under the present state of things in an unexampled manner. We would ask, therefore, why those who wish to change all existing agricultural relations are so anxious to do so with a rush? Why are they unwilling to show to the world that they are right and their opponents are wrong, by clear evidence? The Rent Bill is at present disapproved by the great majority of the public. That majority would be turned into a minority, if facts were forthcoming to show that it was the one thing needful for the salvation of the country. The Rent Bill has been steadily opposed in these columns, but, were it to be shown upon published evidence that its provisions were to the interests of the people of these Provinces, we should be the first to support it. The evidence that is before the public is to the effect that, in the opinion of the most experienced officers of Government, the measure is unwise and uncalled for. On the other hand, we have the opinions of advanced Radical thinkers that it is desirable and necessary. In fairness to those whose property is jeopardised, the question should be decided after careful local inquiry. Those who wish to preserve proprietary rights are not afraid of the result.—Englishman.

INDIAN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

[From the Bombay Gazette, Feb. 15.]

Sir Donald Stewart, the Commander in Chief of India, left Bombay from the Boree bunder Railway Station by the mail train on Wednesday evening. Sir Frederick Roberts, Commander in Chief of Madras, also left the same evening. Salutes of seventeen and fifteen guns respectively were fired from the saluting battery on the occasion. Their Excellencies were pleased to dispense with the attendance of heads of departments and a guard of honour.

Major John Graham McRae, of the Staff Corps, having completed twenty-six years' service, has been promoted to a lieutenant colonelcy; and Lieutenant John Waring Singleton Mercer, having completed twelve years' service, becomes captain. Captain Carruthers, of the Staff Corps, having completed twenty years' service, is likewise promoted. Lieutenant Colonel Bannerman, of the Staff Corps, has become entitled to the colonel's allowance.

It is stated that the reduction of one of the Mountain Batteries, namely, No. 1, Bombay, from six guns to four, is to be carried out immediately. The guns to be discarded are the two that are now on escort duty with Sir Robert Sandeman, which on the return of the expedition will be given in to the Kurrachee Arsenal, with their stores, ammunition, and equipment. The escort is expected at Kurrachee from Gwadur about the middle of the present month.

We learn that a rifle match is being arranged for between the Calcutta Volunteers and the Bombay Volunteer Rifle Corps. Pourparlers have passed between the adjutants; and the terms, with dates and other particulars regarding the match, will be shortly published.

Government have sanctioned a deputation allowance to clerks of the Bombay Commissariat when detached for temporary duty from out-stations to Bombay, to the extent of one-third pay to clerks drawing salaries up to Rs. 100, and one-fifth to those whose salaries are over Rs. 100, the allowance in all cases being restricted to a period of six months.

Major Wace, Superintendent of the Cossipore Factory, has been appointed Commandant of B Battery, which is to be attached to the Administrative Battalion of the Presidency Volunteers.

It is not surprising, remarks the Allahabad paper, that the 2nd Somersetshire Light Infantry (late 12th) have reached Burmah in a deplorably weak condition. Before the corps was moved from Kamptee we pointed out how thin it was in point of numbers, and how much the health of the men had suffered by attacks of fever and cholera, in which respect the battalion has been singularly unfortunate. If it was fit to move anywhere it was to a hill station, and not to a place like Rangoon, where the climate is bad and the duty heavy. The regiment there, to begin with, has to furnish a strong detachment to Port Blair, and when this had been done the unlucky Prince Alberts landed in Rangoon, we understand, less than 300 strong.

Brigade Surgeon J. Browne, I.M.D., has been appointed to the officiating medical charge of the 29th Native Infantry, vice Surgeon Major O'Dewaine, on furlough.

COURTS-MARTIAL.—Private John Brown, 2nd Battalion North Staffordshire Regiment, has been charged before a European District Court-martial with disobeying a lawful command given by his superior officer, using threatening language to his superior officer, and losing by neglect his regimental necessaries. The court found the prisoner guilty of all charges, and sentenced him to be imprisoned with hard labour for one year. Brigadier General S. Edwards, commanding the Bombay District has confirmed the sentence.—Private John Hanna, 2nd Battalion North Staffordshire Regiment, has been charged before a Regimental Court-martial with losing by neglect his regimental necessaries, and making away with, by selling, his regimental necessaries. The court found the prisoner guilty, and sentenced him to twenty-eight days' imprisonment with hard labour, and ordered his pay to be stopped until he had made good the value of the necessaries lost. Brigadier-General S. Edwards, commanding Bombay District, made the following remark on the proceedings:—"I confirm the finding, and I also confirm the sentence, with the exception of that part which relates to the stoppages, which it was unnecessary to record."—At the European District Court-martial held at Poona on the 4th February, Private Francis Gaughan, 1st Battalion North Lancashire Regiment, was arraigned upon the following charges:—1, drunkenness at Poona on the 22nd January; 2, striking with his clenched fist Private and Acting Lance Corporal William Thomson, 1st Battalion North Lancashire Regiment, his superior officer; 3, using threatening language to Private and Acting Sergeant Henry Carter, 1st Battalion North Lancashire Regiment, his superior officer. He was found guilty, and sentenced to imprisonment for two years. This being his first offence, Major General Ross remitted one year of the imprisonment.—At a European District Court-martial held at Poona on February 4, Private Richard Bleasdale, 1st Battalion Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, was arraigned upon the following charges:—1, neglecting to obey an order, at a field firing parade near Poona, given by Lieutenant Churchward of his regiment; 2, conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in that instead of easing the spring of his rifle, which was loaded with ball cartridge, he pulled the trigger, thereby discharging the rifle and wounding Private E. Walsh and Private P. Mansfield, of the same regiment. Finding.—The Court find the prisoner guilty of all the charges, and sentenced him to be imprisoned with hard labour for fifty-six days.—"Confirmed, but in consideration of the prisoner's good character I remit fourteen days of the imprisonment. (Sd.) J. Ross, Major General, Command-in-Chief Poona Division."

IGNORANCE OF EUROPEANS AS TO NATIVE OPINION.

It is a common cry amongst writers in the native press that Europeans have not that intimate knowledge of the social habits or the working of native associations to be able to criticise with sufficient accuracy the motives which conduce to the expression of native opinions. Most persons will admit that, as regard the social part of the question, the trammels of caste, the differences of social and domestic habits and customs, and the innate diplomacy with which the Oriental always covers himself as with a shield in his intercourse with Europeans, prevent our acquiring more than a superficial knowledge of native domestic habits. But with native associations, all of which have been formed within the last half century, and the majority within the last decade, and which, by the publication of their proceedings, profess to "wear their heart upon their sleeve for every daw to peck at," or, to put it in plainer language, to make their "objects and reasons" public to the world, no one ought to be able to say that such is the case. Public affairs are generally supposed to be the objects with which such associations concern themselves, and if any writer in an English paper had ventured to suggest otherwise, he would probably have been met with a shout of derision from the native press. It appears, however, that some of the editors of native papers are not altogether satisfied with the working of native associations, or why do we find one of them writing as follows:—"Associations are only ready to discuss persons, to bid them farewell, to thank them, to congratulate them, to censure them, or condole with them. But has an Association no higher function to perform than to vote addresses? Acts of courtesy are all very good in their way; but they do not exhaust the legitimate concerns of a public body." Of course there are associations and associations, but the remarks of our native contemporary are applicable to most of those that flourish in this country for the double purpose of flattering officials and pandering to the popularis aura at the same time.

ENGLISH PUBLIC OPINION ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

No better testimony could be offered of the flagrant injustice of the provisions of Mr. Ilbert's Bengal Tenancy Bill, than that which is afforded by the readiness with which English public opinion has pronounced against it, from the Liberal as well as from the Conservative side. We do not here refer to the hostility offered to the Bill by such well-known politicians on the Liberal side as Lord Stanley of Alderley; for it was only to be expected that those who have for many years devoted a large share of their attention to Indian affairs, from a disinterested and benevolent regard for the welfare of the Indian peoples, should warmly protest against the invasion of ancient popular rights contemplated by Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert. But when we find public speakers of all shades of political opinions, unconnected with India, dwelling on the injury that will be inflicted on the ryots by a measure ignorantly professed to be intended for their benefit—and when we find English popular audiences listening, not merely with patience, but with openly-expressed sympathy, to the recital of these hitherto unheard-of grievances—it may, we venture to think, be taken as a fair indication of the impression that is produced on unprejudiced men of common-sense by the obviously oppressive nature of Lord Ripon's legislation.

These remarks have been suggested by the reception accorded last week, by a popular audience in Dover, to some pungent remarks on the Bengal Tenancy Bill offered by Mr. H. C. Richards, the recent opponent of Mr. Bradlaugh at Northampton. Mr. Richards, is, indeed, himself a Conservative; but as the opponent of Mr. Bradlaugh he undoubtedly represents the cultured and decent section of the Liberal party, as well as the Conservatives. After speaking strongly of the absurd position in which Lord Ripon had placed himself by the mischievous agitation of the "Ilbert Bill

No. I."—which, in its latest metamorphosis, Mr. Richards compared to "a volume with all the leaves cut out"—the speaker went on to speak of the Bengal Tenancy Bill. We can only give a brief summary of his remarks which appears in a local paper; but the applause with which they were greeted is sufficient to show the bent of popular feeling on the subject. The summary runs as follows:—

"The Bengal Tenancy Bill the lecturer described as a measure which would unjustly interfere with some 210,000 small landowners; and it could not be supposed that this Bill was in any degree to be compared to an English Land Bill. A large number of the 210,000 owners he had alluded to were in the receipt of the enormous income of £30 per annum (laughter), and there were only six out of the whole number who received £6,000 a year. The whole rights of property, more especially in regard to the upper and lower classes in India, would be done away with if this Bill became law (hear, hear); and it must not be forgotten that these two classes had hitherto been the strongest supporters of the British Government in India. Were they going to disturb these men, and to cause disquietude throughout the vast Empire of India, in order to carry out some of the principles which were embodied in the Irish Land Bill, and which had not taken peace or happiness to Ireland? No, that would never do, for they would then be handing over these small tenants to the tender mercies of the usurer, and the tender mercies of the Indian usurer were even worse than the tender mercies of loan societies in England—which were bad enough in all conscience. (Laughter.) The Indian usurer charged from 12 to 57 per cent., and every facility would be given in this Bill to those usurers, who would easily be able to clear the tenant right, although the tenant would not be able to contract himself out of the Act as far as his relations to the landlord went. Would it be right to pass such a bill simply to satisfy some theoretical fancy of Lord Ripon and his followers? (No, no.) He knew that that would be their answer, although they had not yet been able to get the opinion of the British public on the question. This opinion was what was wanted, for if it had not been for the outside demonstrations, no one would have heard anything of the Ilbert Bill until it came up with the financial statement at an early hour of some morning late in August, when it would have been discovered that the Bill had become law without having been brought before the public in any shape or form." (Applause.)

We commend the significance of this incident to the serious attention of Lord Ripon's Government.

THE SILVER DUTIES.

At the meeting of the East India Association last Thursday in Exeter Hall, General Sir Orfeur Cavenagh in the chair, Mr. McKay Smith vigorously denounced the iniquitous import duties on Indian silver goods, whereby Mr. Gladstone persists in depressing the Indian silver manufacture, in defiance of all the free-trade professions of the Liberal party. The discussion was opened by Mr. Roper Lethbridge, who in warm language exposed the selfish hypocrisy and cynical immorality of a Government that can dare to force India to abolish her non-protective cotton duties (all the protective duties had been abolished by Lord Lytton's Government) to curry favour with Lancashire voters, whilst at the same time it refuses to India the trifling reciprocity asked for in the matter of the silver duties. Mr. Martin Wood followed, and deplored the destruction of a valuable Indian industry killed, not by machinery, but by this pitiful paltry duty. Sir George Balfour, M.P., in a telling speech moved a resolution condemning the duty, and promised Parliamentary co-operation. The other speakers were Mr. Holborn, Mr. Liggin, Mr. Slater, Mr. Chisholm, Captain Campbell of Dindigal, Mr. Watherston, Mr. Carlton Wood, and Mr. Cornelius Pare.

Perhaps the severest possible condemnation of Mr. Gladstone's policy was afforded by the fact that the only persons at this important meeting who had a word to say in defence of it, were understood to be two gentlemen closely connected with the home manufacture ; and these gentlemen very frankly admitted that the sense of the whole meeting was against them, and therefore declined to oppose the resolutions. Here we have a very pretty commentary on the "conscientious" free-trade convictions of the present Government !

THE DANGER TO HIGH EDUCATION IN INDIA.

ONE of the questions of the hour in India is "Will the Education Commission produce any results commensurate with the enormous expenditure lavished upon it?" The cost to the Indian taxpayers of that commission will be measured by lakhs and lakhs of rupees. Its President has written some clever letters to the Times in support of the Ilbert Bill ; and a bulky Report has been issued, which—though it has now been out some months—everybody seems to be afraid to begin to read. As a matter of fact, it is probable that no one who has any regard for his cerebral hygiene will attempt to master the whole of this ponderous tome. Still, it is time that its various sections were taken up by specialists, and some estimate formed of the results that are likely to ensue if Government attempts to follow out its recommendations. That some real stimulus may be given to primary education by its means we are quite willing to believe. Mr. Croft has already done more for primary education than any other man in India, and his presence on the Commission could hardly fail to make itself felt in this way. If further progress is to be obtained only at the cost of a breach of the Permanent Settlement, and the imposition of a hateful Educational Cess, we hold that the end will not justify the means. We leave, however, this part of the Education Commission's work for the present ; for its recommendations on the subject of High Education urgently demand attention, as indicating a settled intention on the part of Government to cut down the Colleges, under the pretence of transferring them to aided private agencies.

It is probably not too much to say that the Rev. Mr. Miller, the uncompromising enemy of the Government Colleges of India, has been mainly instrumental in obtaining the adhesion of the Commission to these particular views. At the time of the appointment of the Commission, we protested against the nomination of such warm partisans as Mr. Miller, Mr. Howell, and Mr. Hunter, unless their preponderating influence were fairly counterbalanced by equally warm partisans of the other side. As might be expected from Mr. Miller's great influence and ability, Madras has been the first province in which a commencement has been made in the direction of carrying out these recommendations ; and already we find the educated community of Madras crying out in panic-stricken alarm. Bengal and the other provinces will follow in due course, as they are attacked ; the excitement attendant on Lord Ripon's sensational policy at large alone prevents the outcry being raised in anticipation of the impending attack. This is what the inhabitants of Cuddapah say, in their address presented to the Viceroy during his recent visit to Madras :—

"Sixthly.—The report of the Education Commission has spread dismay throughout the land about the future policy of Government in the matter of State education. The repeated assurances of the President of the Commission about State aid education, had allayed suspicion, till its report appeared before the public, but the suggestions in the report regarding higher education coupled with the recent action of the Madras Government in transferring on a sudden all middle schools to Local Fund Boards and Municipalities, and in abolishing those schools when such bodies were not prepared to take them up, has spread a panic throughout the country. We most humbly and respectfully submit to Your Lordship that the time is not ripe for such a procedure, and pray for the continuance of the Department on its present footing till the arrival of such a time."

We shall return to this address in an early issue.

HOME NEWS.

PRODUCE MARKETS.—Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson state that the markets continue in the same inanimate state as quoted for so many months past, the slight increase of demand referred to during the previous week having subsided. Coffee has suffered a rather heavy decline, amounting to 2s. to 3s. upon plantation Ceylon and East India, excepting for fine bold qualities. No change has transpired in foreign descriptions, but Rio is dull. At the public sale on account of the Netherlands Trading Company held yesterday the decline upon valuations was generally 1 to 1½ cents., giving a quotation for good ordinary Java of 32 to 32½ cents., against 34½ to 35 cents. in January. Latest telegrams upon the leading foreign markets advise a quiet and unsettled tone. The better qualities of coffee are now extremely low compared with Brazil and other ordinary shipping sorts, which may lead to some return of confidence. A few cargoes of Burmah rice off the coast have sold, holders accepting easier rates, but the demand continues slow. There has been no further change in tea since the 21st inst., and the market is quiet. The public sales of Indian have gone with regularity. Quotations show no material alteration, and the supply has decreased also of China import. Sugar continues very dull. Some transactions are reported in Madras Jaggery at current depressed quotations—viz., 10s. 6d. to 12s. per cwt. on the spot, and several floating cargoes Java sold at previous rates to a further slight decline. Beet was receded 3d. to 6d. per cwt., and refined is generally easier. About two-thirds of the cinnamon at public sale on Monday found buyers at January rates to 1d. per lb. less for common to medium qualities, while a few parcels very superior realised better prices. In other spices the only change during the week is a fall of nearly ¼d. per lb. upon Singapore white pepper. Ceylon cocoa has sold at about steady rates. Cinchona at public sales realised better prices.

THE CASUALTIES AT EL TEH—Major Montagu Maule Slade, of the 10th Hussars, was the third son of the late Lieutenant General Marcus John Slade, formerly commanding the Midland District, and late Lieutenant Governor of Guernsey. He was born in 1849, and in 1868 was appointed cornet in the 18th Hussars. He gained his lieutenancy in 1871, and in 1878, having been gazetted as captain, exchanged into the 10th Hussars. In 1882 he was appointed major. He served with the 10th Hussars in the Afghan War in 1878-79, and was present in the engagement at Fettehabad, where he was mentioned in the despatches. He was the brother of Major J. R. Slade, C.B., deputy assistant adjutant and quartermaster general on the staff of the Western District, Royal Artillery. Major J. R. Slade, it will be remembered, distinguished himself in the retreat from Maiwand. The deceased officer was also a brother of Captain F. G. Slade, R.H.A., who is on Sir F. Wood's staff. Lieutenant Francis Noel Probyn, of the 9th Bengal Cavalry, was born in 1855. He entered the Army as sub-lieutenant of the 40th Foot in 1874, and, having been appointed lieutenant, he exchanged into the Bengal Cavalry in 1879. Lieutenant Frederick Arthur Freeman, of the 19th Hussars, was born in 1858. He entered the Army in 1879 as second lieutenant in the 19th Hussars, and was gazetted lieutenant in 1881. He served with his regiment in the Egyptian War of 1882, and was present at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir.

THE "JOURNAL OF INDIAN ART."—By a resolution of the 14th of March, 1883, the Government of India decided to take certain steps for the improvement of the ordinary manufactures and also of the art products of India, and for the promotion of trade in them. By the 18th section of this official ordinance it was arranged that an annual art journal should be published, and that the first number should appear at the expense of the Indian Government before the opening of the Calcutta Exhibition. In accordance with this decision, the first number of the Journal of Indian Art made its appearance in January, and as it contained an excellent and instructive paper by Mr. J. L. Kipling on the subject of the brass and copper wares of the Punjab and Cashmere illustrated by ten plates, it may be said to have made a very reliable beginning. In consequence of its success, it was determined that the Journal of Indian Art should be published quarterly, at least as an experiment. The second number, bearing the nominal date of April, has consequently been put into circulation. The article of which this journal is composed is written by Surgeon Major Hendley, on the subject of "Enamelling, and other Industrial Arts of Rajputana, Central India, &c.," Surgeon Major Hendley's intimate connection with the State of Jeypoor, where the Exhibition was held last year, having given him special facilities of mastering this subject. His description is also simplified by some excellent plates produced under the skilful direction of Mr. W. Griggs. With regard to the objects sought to be attained, the following passage may be quoted from the preface, contributed by Mr. E. C. Buck, the secretary to the Government of India in the Revenue Department. "One of the most important matters in connection with the extension of a demand for Indian art-ware is to decide how far it is legitimate to adapt oriental workmanship and designs to articles of modern utility in Europe and America. To what extent also can Eastern designs and workmanship be applied to Western forms? The issue is one of some difficulty. But unless it is decided, no extended use can be made of Indian art manufactures." It is hoped that the establishment of the Journal of Indian Art will facilitate the solution of the practical difficulty, and that those who are interested in the subject will support it. The Government of India has set an example which every lover of Indian art ought to follow.

THE ANNEXATION OF MERV.—At a meeting of the Balloon Society of Great Britain, held on Friday in the lecture-room of the Royal Aquarium, and presided over by Colonel Parker Gilmore, a paper on "The Russian Annexation of Merv and Government Policy in Afghanistan" was read by Mr. Charles Marvin. Giving a realistic sketch of a Russian invasion of India, he briefly described Baku and its resources, and said there would be no difficulty in ferrying an army across the Caspian, nor yet in conveying it in tugged barges to Michaelovsk should the railway from Krasnovodsk to that point be not then finished. At Michaelovsk the army would first come to the desert, over which one would now travel by rail to Kizil Arvat. At the extremity of the Transcaspian Railway there was no more desert, in the strict sense of the word, all the way to India. Merv three years ago was one of the most inaccessible spots in the world, yet in a few weeks' time Merv would be within the Postal Union. Describing the route by stages, the lecturer said that now the Merv Turcomans were annexed Russia had no enemies to fear the whole way to Herat. Of course, to an army advancing from Askabad, Merv did not lie upon the road to India; Sarakhs was undoubtedly the stepping-stone to Herat to an army operating from the Caspian. But until Merv was annexed Russia could not turn the corner at Sarakhs and advance along the Hari Rud to Herat without exposing her flank to the attack of 50,000 of the finest horsemen in the world. Russia had, in a word, broken down the only living barrier intervening between the Caspian and Herat. Deriding the idea that a line drawn on paper would prevent the Russians from crossing the boundary, he stated that we must put the Sepoy alongside Sarakhs if we wanted to keep the Cossack back. We have now entered upon the most critical period of the Central Asian question, and unless the country insisted upon a firm, clear, decisive, patriotic policy on the part of the Government, we should have a repetition of the Egyptian muddle, with this difference, that our opponents would not be the sheep-like fellaheen, but men who would take advantage of every blunder. The following resolution was moved by the Rev. Dr. Wainwright, and seconded by Mr. J. W. Brewer, C.E.:—"That this meeting wishes to impress upon Her Majesty's Government the necessity for taking active measures to counteract the effect of the Russian annexation of Merv, such measures being, in its humble opinion, the appointment of an English Consul at Sarakhs, the immediate completion of the Railway to Quetta, and the commencement of negotiations with the Ameer for placing English representation at Candahar and Herat as a return for the subsidy of £10,000 a month now accorded him." This was met by a counter resolution, proposed by Mr. Martin Wood:—"That the true line of defence of India is that of her natural boundaries west of the Indus, that her political strength consists in the contentment of her people with our rule, and in the support of a friendly and independent Afghanistan; that if any menace against India should proceed from Russian commanders, the proper course to repel it would be by remonstrance or direct attack in Europe, instead of by the weak and unworthy method of forcing India to sustain the risk and cost of large warlike operations." The discussion was adjourned to next Friday.

THE SILVER MARKET AND THE EASTERN EXCHANGES.

THURSDAY.—Although yesterday's prices of bar silver and Mexican dollars have been repeated to-day, they are quite nominal, and the parcels brought by the West India steamer Elbe have yet to be dealt with. India and China exchange rates are dull, at 1s. 7½d. in both Bombay and Calcutta, 5s. 0½d. in Shanghai, and 3s. 8¼d. in Hongkong. Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Rupee Paper is still quoted at 81½ to 81¾, and the Four per Cents. are firm at 79½ to 79¾.

FRIDAY.—The bar silver brought by the Elbe has been sold to day at 51½d. per ounce, but there has been no business in Mexican dollars, which are nominally quoted at 49½d. per ounce. Indian exchange rates are weaker, at 1s. 7 23-32d. in Bombay, and 1s. 7 11-16d. in Calcutta. Rupee Paper also is easier, at 81½ to 81¾, and 79¼ to 79½ for the Four-and-a-Half and Four per Cents. respectively.

SATURDAY.—Business has been quite at a standstill, and although prices are nominally unaltered, the tendency is dull in view of a further fall in the Indian exchange rates to 1s. 7½d., in Calcutta, and 1s. 7 21-32d. in Bombay. China exchange rates remain at 3s. 8¼d. in Hongkong, and 5s. 0½d. in Shanghai. Rupee Paper has been very quiet, and is unaltered.

MONDAY.—The market for refined bar silver has been inactive, supplies being very scarce. The Calcutta rate for transfers had advanced 1-16d. to 1s. 7 11-16d., Bombay remaining at 1s. 7 21-32d. The China exchange rates are unaltered. Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Rupee Paper has been in rather more demand, and closed ¼ higher at 81½ to 81¾, the Four per Cent. being unaltered at 79¼ to 79½. The Indian Council sold five lakhs of bills on Calcutta at 1s. 7¾d. per rupee.

INDIA IN PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

MERV.

Sir H. TYLER asked the First Lord of the Treasury whether, having regard to recent events in Turcomania, and the Russian advance to Merv, Her Majesty's Government would now reconsider the question of extending the railway from Sibi in the direction of Candahar, not merely for strategical purposes, but also for facilitating British commerce with Central Asia.

Mr. GLADSTONE: Her Majesty's Government are sensible of the fact that it may be necessary, as indicated in the question of the hon. member, to reconsider the question of extending the railway, at all events, as far as Quetta. (Opposition cheers.) It may be well that I should add that there is already in process of construction a road to Quetta by a route which would, in a great measure, be the foundation, if I may so speak, of the proposed railway. (Hear, hear.)

INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

Mr. GIBSON asked the Under Secretary for India whether any, and what, steps had been taken since last August by Her Majesty's Government to meet the grievances of the Indian medical service and to lessen the dissatisfaction which existed in all its ranks.

Mr. J. K. CROSS: Last year I stated that, in view of the gradual removal of the existing disadvantages to the Indian Medical Service of having more officers than there were substantive posts for them to fill, the number of annual appointments would be reduced to the lowest pitch compatible with justice to existing students and the future efficiency of the department. This measure is still being carried out. Only ten appointments were made to the service last year, and only ten will be made this year. It is not proposed to take any other step but this, which must prove effectual in adjusting a due proportion between the number of charges and of officers to hold them.

Mr. GIBSON gave notice to call attention to this subject at the earliest possible moment. (Hear, hear.)

PROSECUTIONS IN MADRAS.

Mr. J. MCCARTHY asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether he would cause inquiry to be made as to the truth of the statement in the Times of India of the 1st inst. that Mr. Grant Duff had called on the Advocate-General to give his opinion as to the advisability of prosecuting for redition the native members of the Cosmopolitan Club, Madras, for discussing politics within the precincts of the club.

Mr. CROSS: The question of the hon. member for Longford is based, as I understand, upon a report in a Bombay newspaper and really, unless the hon. member can give me some better authority, I hope he will not think me discourteous if I decline to trouble the Government of Madras with the inquiry suggested.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

THE ANNEXATION OF MERV.

Baron H. DE WORMS asked the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs whether the following telegram from Vienna—"It is reported that the English Government intends to reply to the annexation of Merv by taking important measures for the protection of Herat. The English Garrison at Quetta, it is said, will be reinforced, the Indian railroad over Sibi will be prolonged to Quetta, and eventually to Candahar, and Russia will be given to understand that England considers Herat to be within the sphere of her protection, while the authorities at Herat are to be warned that England will not tolerate foreign interference of any kind,"—correctly indicated the step of Her Majesty's Government intended to take in view of the annexation of Merv by Russia. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. CROSS: The hon. member for Greenwich asks whether a certain course of action, attributed to Her Majesty's Government by the Vienna correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, correctly indicates the steps which Her Majesty's Government intend to take in view of the annexation of Merv by Russia. On Feb. 22, the President of the Local Government Board stated on behalf of the Government, and in reply to the hon. member for Mid Lincoln, that the matter was now the subject of diplomatic communications, and that it was not possible for the Government to speak in detail upon it at the present time. He also drew attention to the engagements entered into with the Ameer in 1880, and reiterated in 1883, by which, on certain conditions, we undertake to aid the Ameer in repelling unprovoked aggression on his dominions, of which Herat forms a part. I hope the hon. gentleman will agree with me in thinking that the means by which these engagements are to be fulfilled must rest with Her Majesty's Government. (Hear, hear).

THE QUETTA RAILWAY.

Mr. ONSLOW asked whether Her Majesty's Government had given any further instructions for the prosecution of the Quetta Railway.

Lord E. FITZMAURICE said that the matter was the subject of communication between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of India.

Mr. BOURKE asked when papers on the subject would be laid upon the table.

Lord E. FITZMAURICE replied that it was impossible to fix any particular date for the production of the papers.

MALT LIQUOR IN INDIA.

THE consumption of malt liquor of local brew is steadily increasing in the army, while the quantity imported from England is yearly diminishing. In order to show the growth of the local supply, it is necessary to go back ten years. In the official year 1872-73, the annual cost, including freight, of malt liquor imported for the British troops in India, was £129,000; while the expenditure in India for malt liquor brewed locally amounted to Rs. 239,000.

During the ten years from 1872-73 to 1882-83, the cost of the malt liquor imported has diminished to £101,000, i.e., a decrease of £28,000; while the expenditure for locally brewed beer and porter has risen to Rs. 18,13,000, i.e., an increase of Rs. 15,74,000.

The total expenditure, including freight, in England and India for each of the years above mentioned, is given below, the payments in England being converted at twelve rupees to the pound, or 1s. 8d. the rupee.

| | In England. Rs. | In India. Rs. | Total. Rs. |
|---------|--------------------|------------------|---------------|
| 1872-73 | 23,88,000 | 2,39,000 | 26,27,000 |
| 1873-74 | 28,84,000 | 2,97,000 | 31,81,000 |
| 1874-75 | 28,57,000 | 3,23,000 | 31,80,000 |
| 1875-76 | 32,61,000 | 4,15,000 | 36,76,000 |
| 1876-77 | 28,84,000 | 7,55,000 | 36,39,000 |
| 1877-78 | 19,78,000 | 9,65,000 | 29,43,000 |
| 1878-79 | 14,56,000 | 9,18,000 | 23,74,000 |
| 1879-80 | 9,18,000 | 9,37,000 | 18,55,000 |
| 1880-81 | 12,97,000 | 18,39,000 | 31,36,000 |
| 1881-82 | 10,87,000 | 18,28,000 | 29,15,000 |
| 1882-83 | 12,12,000 | 18,13,000 | 30,25,000 |

These results ought to be gratifying to the shareholders proprietors, and managers of breweries in India, who will, no doubt, use their best exertions towards maintaining the standard of their malt liquors, which certainly appear to be much appreciated by British soldiers, notwithstanding that the price at which they are retailed in regimental canteens is the same, viz., four annas per quart, as that charged for the imported article.

A RIDE TO KHIVA

BY CAPTAIN FRED BURNABY,
Royal Horse Guards.

Says page 13:—"Two pairs of boots lined with fur were also taken; and for physic—with which it is as well to be supplied when travelling in out-of-the-way places—some quinine and Cockle's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the natives of Central Africa with the greatest possible success. In fact, the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him five will never fade from my memory; and a friend of mine, who passed through the same district many months afterwards, informed me that my fame as a "medicine man" had not died out, but that the marvellous cure was even then a theme of conversation in the bazaar."

ON DUTY UNDER A TROPICAL SUN.

BEING SOME PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS

FOR

The maintenance of Health and Bodily comfort and the Treatment of Simple Diseases; with Remarks on Clothing and Equipment for the Guidance of Travellers in Tropical Countries.

BY

MAJOR S. LEIGH HUNT, Madras Army,

AND

ALEXANDER S. KENNY, M.R.C.S.E., A.K.C.
Senior Demonstrator of Anatomy at King's College, London; Author of "The Tissues and their Structure," London: W. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, Waterloo-place, S.W.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"We cannot imagine a more useful companion for any who may be going to the tropics; it ought to be considered a necessary item in the outfit."—Land and Water.

"By attending to the instructions which are given in this eminently practical work, the traveller or sojourner in tropical countries will learn how he may not only tolerate but enjoy life in them."—Broad Arrow.

"This is a small book, but a very useful one, being full of valuable hints as to how Europeans may best preserve their health in hot countries. Of particular value are the chapters on diet, dress, and equipment, matters of the first consequence to the preservation of physical health."—Globe.

"The author's suggestions and remarks are based on the most practical experience. The book contains a good deal in a small space, and should be invaluable to all who have to go to the tropics."—Saturday Review.

"The value of the work is enhanced by the fact that the writers have limited themselves solely to suggestions which have arisen in their personal experience, and every intending visitor to a tropical climate would do well to take the book (which is small and concise) in his kit."—Morning Post.

"The soldier, the traveller, the sportsman, are told not only how to ward off the most common diseases and inconveniences, but how to deal with the former in the absence of a medical man."—Vanity Fair.

"This is a small work, but it contains in less than 140 pages an amount of valuable information and experience that might well have filled a volume twice its size."—Overland Mail.

"The facts the authors are anxious to convey are laid down clearly and concisely, and in as few words as possible. It may be said to represent a sort of little medical mouse, capable of making a hole in the network of tropical disease sufficiently large to allow many victims to escape."—Homeward Mail.

"It should be invaluable to young men going abroad, and of great use even to those who have some experience."—Allen's Indian Mail.

"Gentlemen whose duties may lead them to take up residence, either temporarily or permanently, in the East, will find a great deal that is useful in this volume."—Sportsman.

"This is a very practical handbook of suggestions for the guidance of travellers in tropical countries. The compilers have limited themselves to suggestions which have arisen solely in their personal experience in Egypt, India, Burmah, Australia, &c., and their work will be found a most valuable vade mecum for any travellers camping out or roughing it."—Life.

"This is a book of very marked value to all who reside in the tropics. It contains practical suggestions for the maintenance of health and bodily comfort, and the treatment of simple diseases, with hints on diet, clothes and equipment for both travellers and residents. It is replete with valuable advice founded on experience, and tempered with sound sense, and has the no small advantage of saying all it has to say with great conciseness."—Home News.

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.

W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1/300th that of real diamonds.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MARCH 11, 1884.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, Feb. 22; Madras and Allahabad, Feb. 20; Calcutta, Feb. 19.

THE further disclosures about the extent of the recent Russian advance on Merv and the Afghan frontier, which appeared in the telegrams from St. Petersburg yesterday, are such as greatly to increase the disquietude with which that advance must be regarded by every British patriot. It now appears that the advance has not been confined to the Merv line of country, but has been even more startling on the direct line of march to Herat, extending possibly to Sarakhs itself, the great military station that commands that frontier. With the Russians at Merv, and the English rolled back from Kandahar to Quetta, Herat was already clearly at the mercy of the former; but at Sarakhs the Cossack will be actually, from a military point of view, in the very vicinity of Herat.

MR. MARVIN has published a second pamphlet on the Merv advance ("Russia's Power of Seizing Herat, and Concentrating an Army there to threaten India") which is not less striking and powerful than the one which attracted so much attention a fortnight ago. Both are published by Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co.; and will be eagerly read by every one who wishes to get a clear insight into the present alarming state of affairs.

THE nation will await with impatience the full explanation of Ministerial intentions in view of this great crisis. As the Afghan correspondence cannot be published for three weeks yet, it is not too much to ask that Mr. Gladstone should in the meantime vouchsafe a full and clear statement of what has been done, and what is proposed. The political effect of a bold and straightforward declaration of policy will be invaluable both in India and in Europe at this juncture.

WE entirely sympathise with Sir Auckland Colvin in his financial difficulties, in regard to the coming Budget—which is to be published in the Gazette this week, and will not be debated in Council. Sir Auckland has come into office after an extravagant Administration has been working its wicked will on the expenditure; and he naturally has to fall back on "that wretched opium crop" to explain the unpleasant results.

THE large and progressive revenue from the railways is the one bright spot in the financial outlook. And yet Lord Ripon has been vigorously stopping all railway extension, on the very insufficient plea that a Parliamentary Select Committee is to sit on the subject this session. When Mr. Chamberlain does not wish his Merchant Shipping Bill to be too narrowly scrutinised by the shipowners, he declares that a Select Committee means a delay of three or four years; but what is sauce for Ripon's goose is not sauce for the Schnadhorst gander.

NOTWITHSTANDING recent financial bungling and extravagance, the Times correspondent says:—

"On the whole, there is good ground for believing that the Budget will show the position to be a satisfactory one; although of course a war, or a failure of the rains in the coming year, would affect that position seriously."

That so much hope can be felt is due entirely to the sound system of finance inaugurated by Lord Lytton and Sir John Strachey, of which not all the subsequent lavishness has been able to deprive us entirely.

WE heartily congratulate His Highness the young

Nizam on his progress towards recovery from his late alarming attack of cholera. Any accident to the young Prince would be a national calamity, and we sincerely trust that the recent improvement in his condition may be maintained.

THE judges of the Calcutta High Court have done well to record their emphatic protest against Lord Hartington's most improper strictures on their minute, in re the Ilbert Bill, No. 1. We are specially glad to observe that the Native judges have loyally joined in this indication of the honour of the Indian Bench. We hope that Lord Hartington will see the propriety of withdrawing and apologising for his unseemly remarks; and that then we may bid farewell for ever, to the unhappy controversy in which they formed a most distressing incident.

WE desire to attract the attention of all our readers to the important meeting of the National Indian Association that is to be held in the Council Room of Exeter Hall at 4 p.m. next Monday. Sir Arthur Hobhouse will take the chair, and the list of speakers is a most attractive one. The immense importance of the work of this Association and its strictly non-political character ought to secure for it the heartiest support from all those who take an interest in the affairs of India, and who desire to forward that cordial rapprochement between the English and the Indian subjects of Her Majesty, which is the best security for the prosperity and good government of our great Eastern dependency. The warm interest taken by Sir Arthur Hobhouse in the success of the National Indian Association is not the least of the claims of the right honourable gentleman to the gratitude alike of Indians and Anglo-Indians. Sir Alexander Arbuthnot, whose career as an Indian statesman has been marked by a zealous care for the educational advancement of our Indian fellow-subjects, perhaps unmatched among living Anglo-Indians, will fitly move the first resolution next Monday; and the announcement that Sir Alexander will be followed by that veteran philanthropist, Sir John Phear, by Sir Lepel Griffin, and by Dr. Leitner, will be received with entire satisfaction by all sections of the Indian and Anglo-Indian community in London. Mr. Bhownaggee and Mr. Hamid Khan will most worthily represent our Indian visitors on the occasion. Some less distinctively Indian speakers will add a cosmopolitan interest to the meeting; and altogether we can with confidence predict a most interesting and agreeable gathering.

MR. CHARLES MARVIN, whose lecture on Merv at the Royal Aquarium a few days ago, was such a complete success, has received encouragement from an unexpected quarter—from the working men, as the following telegram addressed to him from the Working Men's Conservative Native Club, Landport, will show:—"Unanimous resolution from club numbering over one hundred working men assembled to hear a lecture on Merv by Mr. Robson, that we express our hearty sympathy with Charles Marvin in his works and lecture on the Central Asian Question, and hope the same will be taken up by Conservative working men throughout England." After this, the Pall Mall Gazette will have the audacity to reiterate that "Mr. Marvin and Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett, M.P., are the only two persons who care about Merv."

THE United Service Gazette says:—

"Russia's annexation of Merv continues to occupy public attention on the Continent, the Temps observing that Russia owes this important acquisition entirely to her prestige. It is just now the fashion in England to smile at Sir Henry Rawlinson's warnings; but the English Cabinet is not losing sight of certain precautionary measures which are dictated by the most ordinary prudence; and Mr. Gladstone has announced that the Sibi line is to be prolonged to Quetta. But the Sepoys would have to march 514 miles from Quetta to succour Herat, while from Merv the Russian soldiers would only have to advance 240 miles to possess themselves of the key of India. Merv has been annexed, despite Gortschakoff's solemn promises to England. The Temps does not regard as particularly efficacious the declaration which the Gladstone Cabinet is reported to have made to the St. Petersburg Government, to the effect that it regards Herat as lying within its own sphere of influence. The truth is, adds the French journal, that England is paralysed by Egypt and the Soudan, and that she has no alternative but to put a good face on the matter."

THE Times of India gives the following obituary for the week previous to the departure of the mail:—

"Shahzada Shahpur, son of Shah Shooja, the Suddozai King of Afghanistan."

WITH respect to the Freight Market, the following is by the Englishman corrected up to 2 p.m., Tuesday, Feb. 19:—

"The state of deadlock reported in our last issue may be said to continue, as most of the owners are beginning to lay up their ships, discharge their crews, and wait for better freights. At the same time it must be admitted that if vessels were offering to accept ready employment, they would find very little inquiry for the tonnage to any quarter of the world, as produce still remains very scarce. Six vessels have been worked off during the week, only for Liverpool, two for Dundee, one for the Continent, one for New York, and one for Mauritius, but our unfixed tonnage has again increased to 43,000 tons."

By the arrival of the present mail, we have received neither the Indigo and Tea Reports, nor the summary of the Reports of the Weather and the Crops:

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following telegram from the Indian correspondent of the Times is dated Calcutta, March 9:—

"Recent events in the Soudan do not appear to have excited much interest among the native journalists in India. They confine themselves, as a general rule, to a discussion of the probability of the employment of an Indian contingent against the rebels; and to protesting that the expenses of such a contingent should not be charged against India—which country, they maintain, has no interest in the campaign."

THE GERMAN CHOLERA COMMISSION.

"Dr Koch and his colleagues of the German Cholera Commission will proceed shortly to Goalpara and Darjeeling to prosecute further inquiries. After passing a few days there, they will return to Germany, but they hope to be back in India next winter to carry on their very important and useful labours."

"The Viceroy will leave Calcutta on Friday. He goes direct to Pattiala, where he is to stay for two or three days' shooting, arriving in Simla on the 22nd."

"For some years past it has been the practice of Indian Finance Ministers to present the Budget in the Legislative Council only when fresh taxation involving legislation is to be imposed. The precedent will be followed this year; and as no new taxes are required, Sir Auckland Colvin's first Budget will appear in the Official Gazette on or about Friday. It may be confidently predicted that the estimates for 1884-5 will show a surplus of about £300,000, which, if the year prove favourable, may be considered equivalent to not less than £800,000 on the accounts."

"Several circumstances have combined to render Sir Auckland Colvin's task one of great difficulty. In the first place, he labours under the disadvantage of having taken charge of the finances when more than half the year had expired, and of finding himself face to face with a serious deficiency in the opium revenue. The receipts from that source in 1884-5 will probably be less than those of the preceding year by about £900,000, owing to the short crop of 1883-4, which comes into the market in the ensuing year. Moreover, it is necessary to watch carefully the results to the revenue of the abolition of customs duties and the lowering of the salt-tax, effected by Sir Evelyn Baring in 1882-3. In view of these difficulties, the greatest caution is required in framing the estimates for the coming year; and it is not likely that such questions as the abolition of the license-tax or of the export duty on rice will be taken up now."

"But although the situation is one calling for the greatest caution, it is not without a brighter side. The railways continue to yield a large and progressive revenue; the consumption of salt increases steadily—the increase since the duty was lowered, two years ago, amounting to 10 per cent.; and the opium crop now on the ground, which will come into the market in 1885-6, promises exceptionally well. On the other hand, the spring crops in the upper provinces are poor on the unirrigated lands, owing to the failure of the winter rains. This fact, coupled with the low prices, and large stocks of wheat at home will probably diminish exports to some extent, and, therefore, railway receipts also."

"The Budget will probably announce the usual annual Productive Works Loan, but it is doubtful whether that loan will be issued in London or Calcutta. In the present depressed state of Rupee Paper the probabilities seem to point to London."

"On the whole, there is good ground for believing that the Budget will show the position to be a satisfactory one; although of course a war, or a failure of the rains in the coming year would affect that position seriously."

"The news of the serious illness of the Nizam caused much excitement last week. He was seized with cholera on the evening of Saturday, the 1st, and for some hours his life was despaired of. The more dangerous symptoms abated on Sunday morning, and for the next few days he seemed to be steadily recovering. A relapse occurred on Wednesday, and it was rumoured here that the case was hopeless. Next morning brought better news, showing that the rumours prevalent had much exaggerated the danger. The latest amounts are that he is making steady progress, although he is still weak. A fatal termination of his illness would have been an event to be deplored for many reasons, and more especially in that it would have involved another long minority and Regency for Hyderabad, the next heir being only a few weeks old."

"The Calcutta Exhibition will be formally closed by the Viceroy to-morrow. The programme issued does not give promise of a very imposing ceremony, the chief feature being the reading of the report and of the jury awards, which have been given on the most liberal scale. Mr. Joubert, the promoter, gave a farewell luncheon to the exhibitors and others last week, and stated, in his speech, that about 1,000,000 persons had visited the Exhibition since it had been opened three months before, but that the receipts had fallen short of the expenditure by about a lakh of rupees."

"The Bengal Administration report for 1882-3, lately published, describes the year as one of fair harvests and prices, although the out-turn of the principal crops was not up to the high standard of the three previous years. The condition of the mass of the people is said to have been prosperous, and to continue to afford satisfactory evidence of their material progress. The Lieutenant Governor expresses his belief that the Rent Bill will remove a cause of much discontent and suffering in the present, and a source of great potential peril in the future. There was a decrease of serious crimes, a diminution of the gaol population, and a steady development of sea-borne trade. The Lieutenant Governor makes the following remarks regarding the Vernacular Press:—

"Although the discussions of public affairs were marred by the same spirit, the reckless hostility and the same ready acceptance of unfounded rumours which have disfigured them in former years, there were signs during the year under review that a better appreciation of the true responsibilities of journalism is gradually making its way among the higher class newspapers. Notwithstanding this improvement, it still must be admitted that, speaking generally, the Native Press is not what it should be. It is condemned by the local officers as systematically evincing unreasonable opposition towards the Government; and the truth of this assertion cannot be called in question."

"The Judges of the Calcutta High Court, including the native members, have addressed the Government, protesting against the language employed by Lord Hartington in the House of Commons, characterising their opinion on the Ilbert Bill as an obviously partisan document, wholly devoid of judicial authority. The Judges point out that the opinion thus stigmatised was in no sense volunteered, but was expressed in compliance with the desire of the Government to be favoured with the expression of their opinion on the Bill, and in conformity with the invariable usage on all important occasions of legislation. The expression of the opinions so requested, the Judges observed, is regarded by them as demanding the same conscientious care and impartiality as any other portion of their judicial duties; and imputations of partisanship or unfairness convey no less serious imputations on the integrity of the Court when made with reference to such communications than they would if made in the case of a judicial decision. The document impugned by Lord Hartington represented the unanimous opinion, arrived at after prolonged and anxious discussion, of the entire Bench of European Judges; and was prompted, the Judges maintain, by no other motive or feeling than the desire of faithfully discharging one of the most important of their functions. The letter concludes with a request that it may be laid on the table of the House of Commons, along with the other papers relating to the Bill."

"The subject of Russia in Central Asia is now beginning to attract more attention than heretofore from the native Indian newspapers. That the recent advances of Russia constitute a serious menace to India is very generally admitted. Some journals use these advances as the text for a sermon to England on her duty to India. One newspaper, the Indian Mirror, indulges in hardly veiled threats, and utters the warning that unless the Government does its utmost to conciliate the natives, the tenure of India by England will not be a long one, with Russia already almost at the gates."

THE following telegrams have also been received:—

"CALCUTTA, March 10.—The Viceroy formally closed the Exhibition this afternoon, in presence of a fairly numerous, but not large, assemblage of spectators. The excessive heat of the weather doubtless tended to diminish the attendance. Lord Ripon and his suite entered the main building at half-past four, and were received by the Lieutenant Governor and the Executive Committee, who conducted them across the courtyard to a handsome dais, of coloured marble, the work of Herr Pilbiger, of Vienna.

"The Lieutenant Governor then, addressing the Viceroy, stated that the total number of paying visitors between Dec. 5 and March 4 had been 817,000. If those who had enjoyed free admission were included, the total would be nearly a million. The daily average had been over 6,000—a number exceeding that of the Sydney and Melbourne Exhibitions.

"Lord Ripon, who spoke at some length, congratulated the Bengal Government and the promoters of the Exhibition on the success of the undertaking. He expressed his gratification at the presence of the Lieutenant Governor, whose absence from the opening ceremony, owing to illness, had, he said, thrown a gloom over the occasion. He next dwelt on the advantages of such enterprises as that which he was then closing, and, in conclusion, pronounced it closed. The guns of Fort William immediately announced the fact to the city. With the presentation of the jurors to the Viceroy ended a somewhat tame and unimpressive spectacle."

"ST. PETERSBURG, March 10.—I hear that the necessary funds have already been assigned for the delimitation of the new frontier between Russia, Persia, and Afghanistan.

"It is proposed to separate the Amu Darya district from the province of Turkestan and include it in the Transcaspian Governorship, which arrangement will thus place the direction of Khivan affairs under General Komaroff at Askabad, and render any interference in that quarter on the part of the new Governor General of Tashkend impossible.

"The Baku News states that General Komaroff sent an expedition to the Mervians inviting them to settle on certain lands lying between Merv and the Russian lines which have been recently changed from desert sands into fertile soil by the restoration of several ancient irrigation canals watered by the river Tedjend. The chieftains of Merv, however, concluded that they had better surrender their independence altogether. This was, no doubt, the expedition led by Major Ali Khanoff. The latter, who is the favoured candidate for the Governorship of Merv, is a Mahomedan."

"VIENNA, March 10.—The Pester Lloyd has received a reply to the memorandum by a distinguished military man on the subject of Russian advances in Asia, which it recently published. This reply, it says, is from one eminently qualified to speak on the matter, and who, in his own sphere, is quite as competent an authority as the author of the first paper was on military questions.

"The new writer, referring to the generally prevalent belief that only England and her Indian possessions are threatened by the Russian advance in Central Asia, expresses an opinion that all the civilised nations on the Mediterranean coasts have also cause for apprehension; for they must have held the existence of the Syrian and Persian inland territories to be a security against the misfortune of Russia establishing herself among them. The author does not, indeed, apprehend, as the military correspondent did, an advance of Russia through the inhospitable and extensive Persian districts to the Persian Gulf, in which the maritime power of England could lock it up. He thinks that Russia may have a more feasible and valuable object in view. From Kara, via Diarbekr and Orfah, the Syrian coast may be reached in from 30 to 75 days. The intervening country offers greater resources, and the ruffianly Kurds have before been found accessible to the influence of the Russian rouble.

"Such an expedition would certainly be difficult if a Power like Persia should employ all its strength to defeat it. But against Persia, in such a case, the position on the Attek as a base, with Merv and Herat as flanking positions, would be of the utmost service. The impotence of the Shah's Government against the Turcomans is instanced as a proof that the Persian army would not be much of an obstacle. This writer therefore agrees with the former one that England ought to look to this matter. He remarks, however, that the idea is not novel, but a familiar subject of discussion both in England and in Austria."

A correspondent, writing from Kurrachee, says, that the heavy baggage belonging to the escort of Sir Robert Sandeman will reach Guadar on the 20th inst. Sir Robert Sandeman himself is expected to arrive on the 25th. He will leave Guadar with a number of Sirdars and the infantry on the 26th, in the J. G. S. Ozarwitch. The cavalry and artillery will follow.

It is believed that Colonel Luckhardt, Assistant Commissary General, Quetta District, will shortly go home on fifteen months' furlough on private affairs. It is also stated that Colonel Sexton, Superintendent of Army Clothing, Bombay, will probably take two years' furlough on private affairs in April next.

Her Majesty's Dragon, Captain Blithe, sailed on the 14th inst. for Aden.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

ORIENTAL EXPERIENCE.*

A WORK by Sir R. Temple is always acceptable. He has a fund of information, a considerable amount of culture, and a cheery (if occasionally a somewhat credulous) optimism, which make a pleasant contrast to the style of some of our Anglo-Indian oracles. The nature of the present volume is rather too favourably set forth, perhaps, in the preface, where we are told "this book is intended to be a continuation of my two former books, 'India in 1880,' and 'Men and Events of My Time.'" For the present volume can hardly be called "a book," and its very nature contradicts the assertion as to its intention. As is properly explained in the succeeding sentences, it is "a collection of addresses and speeches delivered before Societies or Associations in Great Britain, and articles contributed to magazines." It is, then, a bundle of papers prepared for various ends, characterised (as the author himself says) by "a ceaseless variety," and put together mainly with the aid of the bookbinder. Indeed, nearly half of the papers do not relate to India at all. In the true sense of the word, this will not constitute "a book."

It would, however, be obviously impossible to do justice to such a work in any limits of the kind at our present disposal. We may say roughly that the collection falls into three portions of which the value varies with the nature of the subject. The geographical section comes first, alike in position and in merit, being marked by sound research, clear exposition, and a picturesque style. The philosophic and religious division is the worst, being shallow, sophistical, and supported by questionable statistics; while the third, the articles devoted to political economy and history, must be left to the judgment of competent readers, with the assurance that they contain matter for thought, if not for unhesitating acquiescence. Some notion of the need for caution may be formed from the fact that Sir R. Temple states (p. 132) that "there are 390,000 native Christians in India;" and further on (p. 161), that they "send their children to school without any exception whatever." Turning to the Statistical Abstract, we find that the native Christians are given from the census as nearly two millions, of whom about 95,000 are "under instruction." Even the excuse that his figures were supplied by the missionaries will not avail him because he is careful to add that he has verified them from the official reports of the Government (p. 133); obviously there are many times the number of native Christians that he gives, and they must have many times as many children. Other similar inaccuracies might be pointed out, such as the claim that the finance of the past twelve years show a slight surplus; the fact being that, for the ten years shown in the Abstract, there is a total net deficit of £4,300,000, excluding outlay on reproductive public works. The previous two years could not make up the differences, and were probably years of still worse result.

The woodcuts appear to be reductions from drawings exhibited on the platforms of the various lecture rooms in which the addresses they illustrate were delivered. They scarcely do justice to the well-known artistic ability of the accomplished and versatile author.

SELECTED ARTICLES.

AN IMPORTANT CASE FOR SHIPOWNERS.

THIS is the point where the difference between Messrs. Graham and Co. and Messrs. Ralli Bros. begins. Messrs. Graham and Co. declined to sign Bills of Lading unless freight was paid on the ninety-eight tons weight in excess of what they had contended the ship was bound to carry on the customary basis of five bales not exceeding fifty-two cubic feet to the ton, and they point to the charter party, more especially the portion in italics, as supporting their view. Messrs. Ralli Bros., on the other hand, contend that the American tonnage scale is for actual measurement at the rate of forty cubic feet to the ton. Ultimately it was arranged to allow the dispute to be settled by arbitration. One of the arbitrators agreed with Messrs. Graham and Co., that the ship was not bound to carry jute rejections, cuttings or butts, at forty cubic feet to the ton under the charter party if pressed to a greater density than the customary five bales per fifty-two cubic feet basis. The other arbitrator, however, differed from this view, inasmuch as he considered the ship was bound to accept freight at 40 cubic feet per ton, irrespective of the density the bales were compressed to. An umpire was then appointed, who agreed with the latter, but at the same time added that it was not fair to shipowners that this state of things should exist. In the present case, therefore, the ship has to suffer. In a pecuniary point of view, the loss in this case is not very serious, but the importance of the principle involved, it appears to us, as far as shipowners are concerned, is most vital. Of course it can be argued that they can regulate the rate of freight according to what they have to carry. But they cannot very well do this in a charter party when they do not know what they are going to carry, and, even if they were paid accordingly, the question of stowing a ship to the best advantage then comes into play.

It would appear from the above decision that shippers can press their sales to any density possibly by the aid of machinery. A ship under a charter is bound to receive say 500 bales per day. She goes on receiving, having taken sufficient ballast to stiffen her to fill up with the ordinary bales, and having filled her lower hold, is then expected to receive bales of say one-fourth, for the sake of argument, greater density than those already received. To do so would make her top heavy, and she would have to go away with empty space, each ton of which would represent a dead loss, proportionate, of course, to the rate of freight agreed upon. Owners, it may be said, can protect their own interests by making certain stipulations as to what description of cargo they will accept, and in what order it is to be shipped, and it certainly behoves them to do so. This could be done by making a similar stipulation for jute, &c., as was lately done in the case of gunnies, that is, to place it at the owners' option to carry the cargo by weight if pressed to above a certain density, or make the "five bales per 52 cubic" basis applicable to New York cargoes. There is no reason, quite the contrary, why Messrs. Ralli Bros. should not derive the benefit of their powerful presses, and it is for owners to see that they do not do so to the latter's disadvantage.—Englishman.

THE CREMATION SOCIETY OF ENGLAND.

THE Council of the Cremation Society of England purchased, in the year 1878, a Freehold Site at St. John's, Woking, in Surrey, especially adapted by position for the purpose, and erected thereon a building, with an apparatus of the most approved kind for effecting cremation of the dead. They next tested it by experiment, and found that it accomplished the purpose required without occasioning nuisance of any kind. Since that time the place has been maintained in perfect order, but has not been used, owing to a doubt raised, soon after the date referred to, as to the legality of adopting the process at present in this country. A recent decision, however, of Mr. Justice Stephen declares that the cremation of a dead body, if effected without nuisance to others, is a legal proceeding. Under these circumstances the Cremation Society feel it a duty to indicate, without delay, those safeguards which they deem it essential to associate with the proceeding in order to prevent the destruction of a body which may have met death by unfair means. They are aware that the chief practical objection which can be urged against the employment of cremation consists in the opportunity which it offers, apart from such precautions, for removing the traces of poison or other injury which are retained by an undestroyed body. The following, therefore, are the conditions on which the employment of the Crematorium will alone be permitted by the Council:—1. An application in writing must be made by the friends or executors of the deceased—unless it has been made by the deceased person himself during life—stating that it was the wish of the deceased to be cremated after death. 2. A certificate must be sent in by one qualified medical man at least, who attended the deceased until the time of death, unhesitatingly stating that the cause of death was natural, and what that cause was. 3. If no medical man attended during the illness, an autopsy must be made by a medical officer appointed by the Society, or no cremation can take place. These conditions being complied with, the Council of the Society reserve the right in all cases of refusing permission for the performance of the cremation, and, in the event of permitting it, will offer every facility for its accomplishment in the best manner. Signed on behalf of the Executive Council. WM. FASSIE, C.E., Hon. Secretary, to whom communications may be addressed, 11, Argyll street, Regents Street, W., March, 1884.

MEMORIAL OF THE GOOD TEMPLARS TO THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY, SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

The memorial of the undersigned respectfully sheweth that your memorialists have from time to time heard with deep sorrow of the increase of intemperance in Her Majesty's Empire of India, and that the existing Government regulations for the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors tend to foster rather than discourage the habit of using such liquors and intemperance, not only among her Majesty's European subjects, but among the natives of India.

The matter has been afresh brought under the notice of your memorialists by the Grand Worthy Chief Templar of India, who has recently visited the metropolis.

Your memorialists are emboldened to call your lordship's attention to the matter by their conviction that your lordship will quite recognise that anything which tends to affect injurious the morals of the people of India, must necessarily imperil good order and material progress in that empire.

Your memorialists, therefore, respectfully ask your lordship to make official inquiry into the relation of the Government with the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in India.

We are, Your Lordship's obedient servants,

Signed on behalf of the Middlesex D.L. by the Executive.

[REPLY.]

India Office, S.W., March 3, 1884.

Sir,—I am directed by the Earl of Kimberley to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated 11th ult., enclosing a memorial from the Middlesex District Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars on the subject of the alleged increase of intemperance in India.

The memorial has been considered by his lordship in Council.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

J. A. GODFREY.

THE RUSSIANS AT MERV.

THE announcement that the Turcomans of Merv have made submission to Russia has so far been received in this country with much calmness, though certainly not with indifference. The subject has already been debated in the House of Commons, and yesterday, on a motion of the Earl of Lytton for the production of papers and correspondence, it gave rise to an animated discussion in the House of Lords. It often happens that in the discussion of large questions of Imperial policy the House of Lords stands out in favourable and instructive contrast to the House of Commons. The speeches, though fewer, are often more weighty and less highly charged with party prepossessions. We cannot, however, pretend to think that this has been so in the present case. In the House of Commons the matter was discussed in a business-like and dispassionate spirit, which showed, as Sir Charles Dilke said, that there was no difference between the two front benches as to the manner in which the subject ought to be treated. In the House of Lords, on the other hand, in spite of the attempt of the Duke of Argyll to lift it to a higher level, the debate wandered off into vain and antiquated recriminations concerning the policy pursued in the past by successive Governments in this country and in India. This digression was inevitable, perhaps, when the political antecedents of some of the speakers are considered, but it certainly did not tend either to elevate the tone of the debate or to enhance its practical character. Nevertheless, the whole discussion may be regarded as having served a very useful purpose. It enabled the Government clearly to explain and define its views, and it will prove to all concerned, whether in England or in Russia, that this country is by no means indifferent to the course of events in Central Asia. There is, of course, some ground for anxiety, though there is no occasion for alarm, in the recent advance of Russia to Merv. It has long been foreseen, and the pledges formerly given by Russian statesmen on the subject are recognised as having been rather conditional than absolute. On the other hand, certain material changes in the relations of Russia to Afghanistan are effected by the approximation of their respective frontiers, and these changes render necessary a corresponding and consequential alteration in the manner in which the Indian Government must regard its relations to Afghanistan and its ruler, and in the measures to be taken for the security of its North Western frontier.

As matters stand at present, it is unnecessary for us to enter at any length into the question, which occupied a considerable portion of yesterday's debate, of the circumstances in which Russia has been induced to extend her influence in the direction of the Merv oasis. The long list of pledges given by Russia, which was recited by Lord Carnarvon, is important, no doubt, in many respects, but it does not vitally affect the case as it stands at present. It will be interpreted by some politicians as showing that Russian diplomacy is incurably perfidious, while others will see in it a proof that the Russian advance in Central Asia is impelled by forces too powerful for mere diplomacy to control. In present circumstances, however, the difference between these two methods of interpretation is little more than speculative. The Russians are now at Merv, and the question for English statesmen to consider is in what way their presence there is likely to affect Afghanistan in the first place, and, through Afghanistan, India. We hold ourselves equally disengaged from considering at any length the question to which Lord Lytton devoted so much attention—whether, namely, the true policy to pursue, or rather, perhaps, to have pursued, is that with which he himself is identified, or that which finds favour with the present Government. Such a question is now mainly one of historical interest, and if we were to discuss it in any detail we should have to correct the rather loose historical reminiscences of the late Viceroy of India by the aid of the more accurate and authentic version of the facts given by Lord Northbrook. But the whole question of the Russian annexation of Merv and its consequences is too important in itself and too practical in its bearings to be made the basis of a mere party attack on the Government for the abandonment of Candahar. It is difficult at present to foresee all the more remote consequences that may result in time from this extension of the Russian dominions in Asia. An Austrian military critic, whose opinion we quoted a few days ago, regards the occupation of Merv as a menace, or, at least, a source of anxiety rather to Persia than to Afghanistan. It is not impossible that this view may in the end prove to be correct, and the contingency is certainly not one to be entirely neglected. It is worthy of note, however, that another Austrian critic of Russian affairs whose opinions we give this morning, and whose authority to speak on the subject is beyond question, seems to look for a further development of Russian policy in a quarter where, as he truly says, the direct interests of England and India are not so much concerned as those of the Mediterranean Powers of Europe. If Russia were contemplating a descent upon the Syrian coast from Kars by way of Diarbekir, the possession of Merv—involving as this writer seems to assume, though surely without good reason, the command of Herat—would enable Russia to neutralise the military resistance of Persia to such an advance. In that case, of course Russia, would have to reckon not merely with England, whose right to determine the fate of Herat has always been asserted and acknowledged, but with all the Powers interested in the maintenance of the status quo in the East. It is, however, a far cry from Merv to the Levant, and, in spite of the authority of the writer whose views we are quoting, we are disposed to think that the day is far distant when Russia will be tempted to undertake such an enterprise.

The immediate concern of the future lies, so far as India is concerned, a good deal nearer home. The Russian advance to Merv brings the Russian frontier into further contact with that of Afghanistan. The two frontiers have already been contentious, as the Duke of Argyll pointed out, in the case of Bokhara, but the case of Merv is in many respects different, and calls for more definite and decisive action in the direction of a fresh demarcation of the Afghan frontier to the north west. So long as the Turcomans were Afghanistan's only neighbours in that quarter, the frontier might safely be left undefined, but the relations between a civilised Power such as Russia, and a semi-barbarous Power like Afghanistan, are likely in any case to be too delicate to be left at the mercy of border feuds and raids. It will be observed that in a telegram from our correspondent at St. Petersburg, which we printed yesterday, it was stated that two new administrative districts were about to be formed, one of Merv and the other of the Tedjend, "including, it appears, Sarakhs." This at once raises a question of considerable difficulty and delicacy, since Sarakhs is a place of no little importance in relation to Herat. But it will not be sufficient to define the Afghan frontier in the direction of Merv. Afghanistan itself must be strengthened by the support of the Indian Government, and its ruler must be given to understand that he will not be left to himself to resist any interference from without, or any attempted advance of Russia beyond the frontier now to be defined. Our relations with Abdurrahman, the present Ameer, are stated by the Government to be in a satisfactory condition, and no effort must be spared to maintain them on a permanent footing of friendship. So long as the Ameer is secure in his own power and in the friendly support of the Indian Government against foreign interference or foreign aggression, we have in the present condition of affairs in Afghanistan, at least as strong a security against any evil consequences likely to arise from the Russian occupation of Merv as we should have had from the settlement of Afghanistan proposed a few years ago by Lord Lytton and described yesterday by Lord Northbrook. But beyond this it is necessary—and the Government clearly recognise the necessity—to take some further steps for the security of the passes which lead from Candahar to the valley of the Indus. Our relations with Beloochistan have been placed on a satisfactory footing, and the Khan of Khelat has formally handed over to us the administration of Quetta, and the control of the Bolan Pass. By these steps, which were fully explained yesterday both by Lord Kimberley and Lord Northbrook, the military position in that portion of the Indian frontier—the portion that would be immediately threatened by a hostile advance from the direction of Herat and Candahar—has been rendered secure, and its security will be still further provided for by the reconstruction and extension of the railway from Sibi as far as Quetta itself. These are the steps immediately contemplated by the Government, and for the present they may be regarded as both judicious and sufficient. But negotiations on the whole subject are now, it would seem, in progress with the Russian Government, and, in spite of previous failures, we cannot but hope that in the present temper of the two countries they will lead to a permanent and satisfactory settlement.—Times

THE DIPLOMATIC CONSEQUENCES OF THE MERV OCCUPATION.

In an article on "The Russians and Merv," which appeared in the Times on Feb. 8, we stated that this country was disposed to accept the accomplished fact as to the fate of Merv, but that "it must be followed by a diplomatic arrangement which will substitute what is clear and unequivocal for a condition of things that is vague and very much the creation of individual and fluctuating opinion." Although we believe that no decision has yet been come to by the Cabinet as to the form or most appropriate moment for the commencement of any negotiations, still the whole question has been engaging their attentive consideration with the view of instituting some proceedings which shall have enduring and beneficial effect. Certain questions have been asked in the House of Commons on the subject of the extension of the Sibi railway to Quetta, and even beyond; but, however desirable and necessary that line may be with regard to the internal communications of India, it would be extremely impolitic and calculated to defeat the ends of the Government, to allow it to be supposed that our responsible officials consider that the best or only way to meet Russia's latest advance is to take one step forward on our side. To do so would be to sanction a policy of responsive advances until the two frontiers of England and Russia have become continuous; and that policy is one which, whether carried out with a restricted or on an expanded frontier, has never found favour with responsible statesmen of either party.

No intelligent person wishes that the consequences of the Merv occupation should be discussed with undue references to the alleged breach of faith shown by Russia on the one side, or to impossible projects of military interventions by England on the other. The resources of diplomacy in the Central Asian question are still, practically speaking, illimitable. They have only to be employed with discretion and supported with firmness to secure a longer settlement than any that could be obtained by other and more costly means. Russia has its work to perform in Central Asia. The natural difficulties and the smallness of its reward are certainly strong reasons why it should object of being deprived to any facilities within its reach for removing the one and enhancing the other. The extent of the steppe journey from Orenburg induced it, on the complete pacification of the Caucasus, and still more strongly after the capture of the Armenian fortresses, to turn to the eastern side of the Caspian for the purpose of reaching its territory in Turkestan. No one could have been so foolish as to expect after the decisive victory at Gok Tepe that Russia could be long kept out of Merv, or from realising that object of direct communication between Krasnovodsk and Charjui which was the main purpose of its campaigns against the Turcomans. The people of this country have no wish to fetter Russia's action for its own purposes of internal self-development. They resign their historical interest in the fate of Merv not without a pang at the snapping of a sentimental link, but still with the sense that Russia had taken all the steps to insure its possession, and that there was not a single alternative admitting of successful execution. But the occupation of Merv brings to a close those operations south of the Oxus for which Russia can give any reason that will appear valid in the eyes of Englishmen, and the appropriateness of marking this turning-point in the progress of a great political question by some clear and decisive convention between the two Governments will be at once evident. What has to be done is to leave Russia in unshackled possession of a route from Askabad to Merv outside the frontier of Persia, re-defined, if necessary, for the purpose, and at the same time to exclude it from all points the military occupation of which would compel our Government in return to resort to military precautions for the defence of the north-west frontiers of our subsidised ally, the Ameer of Afghanistan. The arrangement of these two points will not be quite as simple as the moderate language of the official Russian Press would indicate; and the most probable way of attaining a satisfactory solution will be, after the exchange of views between the Cabinets of St. James and St. Petersburg, by the appointment of a Commission for the clear delimitation of the Persian and Afghan frontiers along their whole extent of contact with the dominions of Russia and of the ruler of Bokhara, whose dependence on Tashkend is not disputed.

If there is to be a satisfactory issue the question will have to be approached in a spirit of broad statesmanship and not, in a frame of mind that will rest easily content with any arrangement to restrict Russia for as brief a period to Merv as has happened in the case of Askabad. Those who were, theoretically at least, disposed to accept with equanimity the appearance of the Cossack scouts on the western side of the Suleiman passes have been disturbed by an arrangement which transfers Merv, remote as it is, to Russia's hands, and which places the Czar's troops in a position of comparative advantage with regard to Herat. The occasion of such intelligent concern seems particularly opportune for the attainment of a clear and unequivocal understanding. Neither England nor Russia can claim the very highest motives for its conduct in regard to this Central Asia question. Let it be admitted, once for all, that both are actuated by motives of self-interest. England has acquired all the possessions it covets; any fresh territory will only be taken out of sheer necessity for the protection of that already annexed, or as a measure of precaution against exterior attack. In both cases it is needless to say that these steps would only be adopted with reluctance, and when every other alternative had failed. Russia, on the other hand, not having obtained self-content with even the vast territory subject to her sway in Asia, still conquers for conquest's sake, and believes that the addition of deserts and nomadic tribes increases the importance and majesty of the Czar. We are not disposed to think therefore that even the possession of Merv will induce Russian officers and generals to maintain the passive attitude towards their neighbours which will alone enable them to devote proper attention to their real business, the just and beneficent government of the races and regions intrusted to their charge. But if there is uncertainty as to what the Russians may do, there can be no room for doubt as to what our own course is to be, more especially as the greater our hesitation the further will Russia be disposed to encroach and to carry the effect of the rights it may hold itself to have acquired with the surrender of the Turcomans of Merv. We raise no objection to the occupation of Merv, or to the completion of communications by the most direct route between that place and Askabad. But there our complaisance ends, and in return for it we shall count on respect being paid to the territories of both Afghanistan and Persia as they may be found at the present time to exist.

While there is not much difficulty in stating what our main object will be in the negotiations that will arise out of the Merv occupation, the details bristle with difficulties which can only be cleared up on the spot by some Anglo-Indian official of diplomatic experience and more than usual firmness and decision of character. It is not even clear whether the more effectual plan of proceeding would be by direct negotiation with Russia, or by the appointment of a frontier commission in conjunction with the Ameer for the laying down of the exact borders of Afghanistan on the Murghab and in the Turcoman desert. But for the position of Sarakhs, now and for very many years past the station of a Persian garrison, this proceeding would probably be not merely the simplest, but also the one most likely to insure a successful result. We are not at all certain that an arrangement on this subject alone, completely satisfactory to the Ameer as well as to ourselves, would not constitute the best possible settlement and form a highly creditable monument of Anglo-Indian diplomacy. The first step towards the realisation of this design would be for the Ameer Abdurrahman to enter cordially into joint action with the Indian Government on the subject, but it may not be as simple a matter as might be supposed to get him to move in the desired direction. Afghan rulers have a habit when they are asked to do a certain thing of imagining that they ought to get something in return, and although he has received a large and liberal subsidy, there is nothing improbable in the supposition that he might consider any active intervention on the Murghab not to come within the scope of his pledges. It is a matter of present regret that Lord Ripon should not have made it convenient last year to receive Abdurrahman at Lahore or Peshawur before bestowing upon him the subsidy of twelve lakhs; and it would now be wise policy for an interview to be speedily arranged, if not between Abdurrahman and the Viceroy, then, at all events, between the Afghan King and the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab. Although there is no disposition to grant the Ameer any further assistance in arms or money, it should not be hard to convince him that he, too, has interests involved in this frontier question, at the same time that he might find an opportunity of deciding his long-standing difference with his cousin Ishak in Turkestan. He will also want English countenance in establishing the validity of his claim over Shignan and the other districts south of the Murghabi or Aksu River, which his energetic lieutenant in Badakshan has recently occupied. We are not destitute of means, therefore, of conferring obligations on the Ameer, and we have other ways of showing how much our interests are in common than by bestowing upon him some more of our rupees.

But, although we could work exclusively by means of Afghanistan in this matter were we so disposed, there is no intention to sanction any flagrant infraction of Persian territory. M. Lessar's very interesting surveys have been directed to the object of laying down a line of railway through Sarakhs to Herat, and they are instructive as efforts both of individual enterprise and of a hopeful imagination. But a Russian railway to Herat does not come among those schemes necessary for Russia's development to which this country would accord a good-natured tolerance, if it would be out of place to feign sympathy. The explorations of the Russian engineer are not applicable to the present situation, as Sarakhs, if it remains Persian, will not become a station on the new line beyond Askabad, which, by the way, has yet to be constructed. We are glad to see that the Russian Press unanimously disclaims all intention to interfere with Sarakhs, for it is unquestionably a Persian stronghold; but we cannot forget that so distinguished a man as General Petroosevitch ridiculed the idea of any sovereignty over the Turcoman tribes being partial. Whenever the Merv Turcomans were overcome, their surrender, he declared, would carry with it that of the clans on the Murghab and of those in the desert towards Andkhoy. The only solution of the Turcoman question which he was prepared to accept was one based on the largest application of the ethnological principle. It would hardly be fair to say that those responsible for the direction of the St. Petersburg Foreign Office share this view; but still it can do no harm to point out that the execution of any such idea would involve the violation of territory unquestionably Afghan. The accuracy of existing maps as to the extent and proper limits of the Ameer's province of Badkhees is problematical; and the facts will have to be ascertained on the spot. But it is certain that a limit will have to be placed at some point north of Penjdeh to any further advance on the part of Russia up the valley of the Murghab. It may be asserted that, while the delimitation of the new frontiers will afford a favourable opportunity for skilful surveying, and also perhaps for the revival of musty and forgotten claims, the retention by Persia of Sarakhs, and by Afghanistan of Penjdeh, Andkhoy, and Khoja Saleh, will serve for a very long time to preserve peace on these borders and to deprive the Russian occupation of Merv of that dangerous significance which it will only possess if we allow it to be followed by the cession of Sarakhs and Penjdeh, and if our Government were to regard with apathy the annexation of the district of the Sarik and Salor Turcomans, which is undoubtedly within the limits of Afghanistan. It is satisfactory to know that even should Russia manifest indisposition to come to a final and amicable arrangement with this country, it lies within our power to secure the practical point by defining beyond possibility of dispute the frontier line of the Ameer's dominions by means of an Anglo-Afghan Commission.

OPENING OF THE ASSAM RAILWAY.

[CALCUTTA, Feb. 21.]—The dinner given by the Assam Railway Company to the Chief Commissioner took place at Debrooghur, on Tuesday night, in the large engine-house. There were huge fires of Makum coal burnt outside, illuminating the surroundings. Over 100 guests attended.

Mr. Benjamin Piercy proposed the health of the Queen, and then Dr. Berry White announced the receipt of congratulatory telegrams from the Viceroy, Mr. Brough, the Chief Commissioner, and from Sir Steuart Bayley. He then proposed the Viceroy's health in the following terms:—"In the dear old land beyond the sea, where we have all come from, where we hope to return sooner or later, in public or political differences we are accustomed to give and take hard knocks, but when the contest is over we accept the result and shake hands with our opponents. Here in the most British settled part of India the highest ideal is to assimilate as much as possible the condition of our public life to that we are used to at home, and our fixed resolve is to maintain intact and inviolate all privileges, rights, and exemptions that are inherited from our English forefathers. (Loud cheers.) A year ago, a measure that assailed our most cherished privileges was introduced, when this district had the supreme honour of being the first to step into the arena in defence of British rights. We thus gave the keynote to the rest of India, and with other districts in the province bore through-out the brunt of the battle. (Loud cheers.) The struggle is now over, and the question has been decided. A settlement has been arrived at that no Government will be insane enough to disturb for another half century, and the time has come to bury the hatchet, and accept the right hand of reconciliation held out by our rulers. Those who have been foremost in the fray are always most generous in the hour of victory, and with this conviction I ask the men of Assam to drink restored health and long life to Her Majesty's representative. In the heated discussions of the past year Lord Ripon's one great mistake was the only thing remembered; all his good acts and his wise policy having been forgotten or ignored. The majority of us represent those who are interested in the great tea industry of the province, and we should not forget that Lord Ripon's Government has conferred greater benefits on our enterprise than that of any of his predecessors for the past twenty years. To him we owe the passing of Act 1, of 1882, in the face of a most strenuous and unscrupulous opposition from the native press. To him is due the removal of all import duties, which bore heavily upon and added to the expense of nearly all the factory stores we use. He gave the material and the still more valuable moral support of the Government in the endeavours made to find new Colonial and American markets for our produce. Lastly, were it not for his personal influence in obtaining from the Secretary of State the supplementary concessions for the Assam Railway Company, it could never have come into existence, and the great works and the vast mineral treasures you inspected yesterday would have been as much a closed book as if they were locked up in another planet. Gentlemen of Upper Assam, for five-and-twenty years I have, whether here or in England, taken a pretty active part in all matters concerning our common interest and welfare. I have during that long period made many requests to you, and never once met with a refusal. I now ask you to perform the gracious act that will ring throughout the empire redounding to your good feeling and honour. I call upon you to join with me, with the servants of the Crown here present, in drinking, not grudgingly, ingly, not conventionally, but with hearty good-will, the health of the Viceroy."

The toast was fairly well, but not enthusiastically, received. The health of the Chief Commissioner was received with great applause, Mr. Elliott replying. He proposed the toast of the Assam Railway and Trading Company, dwelling on the importance of the railway and coal mines of the province generally. He said that the difficulties had been overcome with complete success, and he pointed out that with the exception of the Muttras-Hatras line this was the cheapest constructed railway in India.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

THE ZEMINDARS' MEMORIAL AGAINST THE TENANCY BILL.

IN our issue of the 7th inst., was published the beginning of the reply given, by the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the memorial lately submitted by the zemindars of Bengal and Behar against the provisions of the Rent Bill. The published portions deal exclusively with the historical aspect of the question. Into that part of the question it is not desirable to enter. It would be tedious and uninteresting to the general reader. The question, however, has now assumed a form in which nothing that can be written in a newspaper would convince either of the opposing schools of their being in error.

We demur, however, to the sweeping assertion that the memorial rests upon fragments of history ill-remembered and of law ill-understood. In the interests of all alike, some authoritative decision on the point whether these fragments of law are ill-understood should be supplied. It cannot be expected that the public will take for granted the ipse dixit of the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, that the memorialists' law is ill-understood, because it differs from his ideas of what is a correct understanding on the point. The question is one of far too vast importance to rest entirely on any layman's decision. Surely, the opinion of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council might have been obtained as to the interpretation of a law regarding which so much difference of opinion exists. It is in the interests of the general community that the law on this point should be laid down by authority the weight of which should be unquestionable by either partisan or opponent of the Bill. As a matter of fact, people generally do not accept as infallible the conclusions, regarding either law or fact, at which the rent law Commissioners arrived. It would, therefore, be more satisfactory to every one concerned, were a decision on the point obtained once and for all. The historical bearings of the questions may interest antiquarians, and we agree with the Lieutenant Governor in saying that there is no need to go behind Act 10 of 1859, which is now the law of the land. It must be remembered, however, that the contention of the advocates of the Bill is, that they are about to revive dormant law, and not to create by law new and fantastic rights. They have forced the historical contention forward, and we do not consider that they have improved their position thereby. The practical mind of the Lieutenant Governor would accept the current law of the country as an accomplished fact. Had the promoters of the Bill done so, their positions could better have been understood. Upon the question of law, however, there can be no doubt that something more is required, and not unreasonably required, by those whose rights are assailed, than being merely told that they have ill-understood the law upon which they base their claim. It is a method of disposing of an argument which, however pleasing it may be to those who use it, fails to carry conviction to the unlightened public. Were the Secretary to the Government to have come forward armed with the opinions of the great lawyers who form the court of ultimate appeal in matters connected with Indian law, we should have bowed to their decision and admitted the public were in error. The public, however, will decline to accept as gospel the position that the advocates of the Rent Bill have alone given a proper interpretation law, and that their opponents have ill-understood the very fragmentary reading of it which they have mastered. In this letter, too, it is declared that the zemindars demanded a change in the law, and that this Rent Bill is the outcome of that demand. It cannot be reiterated too often that the zemindars asked for a change in the law to enable them to realise their own rents, and the Government assented—that their demand was acknowledged as well founded by three successive Lieutenant Governors, and that a Bill to give effect to those demands was actually drafted in Sir Ashley Eden's time. It is simply marvellous how any promoter of the present Bill can say that it is an outcome of the original request made by the zemindars and admitted to be reasonable by the Government. Let those who consider the Bill to be all that is excellent, openly say that it is brought in because it is necessary and right to introduce it, but no one can accept the theory that it originated with the desire on the part of the zemindars for acquiring facilities for collecting their rents. The Bill that was founded upon that desire was unfortunately never passed into law.

It is unreasonable to try and trace in any feature of the present measure a likeness to the Bill which was considered necessary by Sir Ashley Eden, and which was introduced by him. This Bill deprives the zemindars of the powers that were left to them of obtaining their rent, and deprives them at the same time of rights which for years they had enjoyed. It is as though a person invoked the aid of the magistrate to eject an unruly person from his house, and that, on finding that not only was the unruly tenant kept in possession, but also that he was ordered to divide his property with the tenant, he were then to be told that he had himself to thank for the result of his application.—Englishman.

THE "STATESMAN" ON MAJOR BARING'S FINANCE.

When we called attention six or eight months ago to the improvidence of attempting to pay off the Home Sterling debt, with exchange at 1s. 7½d. per rupee, only to borrow again in silver at a loss of 20 per cent. in the price realised for the stock—we were told that so satisfied was the Government of the wisdom of their course, that the two operations were to become normal. A million sterling of the Home debt was to be paid off every spring, and a new Rupee Loan of 2½ crores floated every autumn. Such finance is all but inconceivable, and it is permitted us to hope that we have seen the last of it. It was in March last that the Government paid off £1,000,000 of the debt in England, on account of what it called the Famine Insurance Fund, Major Baring assuring us in his financial statement that this step was taken with the approval of the commissioners for the reduction of debt. It mattered not with whose approval it was done, no more wasteful appropriation of the resources of the Government could have been made. Major Baring himself told us that the loss upon the operation was £227,000, but this amount represented the loss by exchange only, and fell some what short we suspect, even of that. But to this enormous and gratuitous loss had to be added the premium upon the Stock redeemed. The redemption, we presume, was made in the Four per Cent. Stock that matures in October, 1888, and that stock could not be bought for less than 105 to 106. Thus, to effect this operation of paying off £1,000,000 in London, that no one wanted to see redeemed, and that could not be redeemed without serious injury to this country, the Government submitted to a loss of twenty-three lakhs of rupees in exchange alone, and another loss of six lakhs in the premium to effect the redemption. The Budget statement minimised the loss, but could not conceal the real character of the transaction. A million sterling of the India debt in London, would necessitate a remittance of 30 lakhs, as the Secretary of State has no advantage over the private purchaser in such transactions, and to extinguish £8,000,000 of debt in London, Council drafts to the extent of one hundred and thirty lakhs of rupees, in excess of the requirements of the India Office, must have been thrown upon the market. Now we ask our readers to reflect upon this purely gratuitous aggravation of the exchange difficulty—with silver at 50 pence the ounce, and the Secretary of State wringing his hands over the fact that it was next to impossible for him to sell his Bills at all. And then Major Baring complained in his Budget statement of the serious inconvenience which the Government of India experienced from the unstable value of the rupee:—

"It is not," he said, "that the value of the rupee is low that causes inconvenience. What causes inconvenience alike to Government and to trade, is that the value of the rupee is unstable. It is impossible to state accurately in Indian currency what the annual liabilities of the Government of India are, and a calculation which will hold good for even one year is exceedingly difficult to make. . . . It is sufficient to state these facts to show the grave inconvenience to the Government which results from the unstable value of the rupee."

We italicise a few words in this extract, and feel strongly tempted to say that we wish the inconvenience to the Government had been ten times as great as it was. For it was its own unintelligent and dogged action that was the cause of this instability. We saw it stubbornly refusing for months together in 1882 to sell a single Council draft because it thought that the exchange banks could be coerced into paying more for them than they were worth. And then, after holding out till they could hold out no longer, we saw them throw the drafts in a flood upon the market, entreating the banks to take them at whatever price they pleased to give. It is the statement of simple fact that the financing of the Home charges and the placing of the Council Bills are managed with a want of intelligence next to incredible. Everything that it was in man's power to do to aggravate the exchange difficulty, the Government itself did all through 1882-83, and when the exchange banks had relieved its necessities, and the rupees might have been expected to rally in value, it went out of its way to issue gratuitously 130 lakhs of its Bills to pay off a million Sterling debt in London, with exchange at 1s. 7½d. There is not an exchange bank, not a mercantile firm in the world, that would not change its staff ten times over before it would submit to an administration of such incompetency as has long been normal with the Government of this country. As for the interests of trade, the Government thinks no more of those interests than of the interests of the Fiji Islands.

Only ten months ago, it was thought wise finance to draw 130 lakhs of silver from Calcutta to redeem a million of debt in London, regardless of exchange altogether, of the interests of the merchant, of private remitters, of the home capitalist, and the toiling millions of India itself. The truth is that official ignorance is so profound that our financiers never imagine that trade can be affected by their operations. And the same men who withdrew these 130 lakhs from the Treasury in so senseless and wasteful a way, announced directly afterwards that they wanted to put the money back, and another crore with it, if the market would only stand it. They voluntarily paid 5 per cent. premium to repay the million sterling that no one wanted repaid; and were then ready to submit to almost any discount if the public would but give the million back. Indeed, they wanted 2½ millions instead of one.

The resources of India are so great that the capitalists of Europe are ready to lend the Government any amount of money at 3¼ to 3½ per cent. interest, if it will but issue the kind of stock which suits the convenience of the Stock Exchange. They do not want 4 per cent for their money, although the Government persists in offering it. "We will give you as much as you like," they say, at 3¼, but don't offer us your rupee paper. We cannot deal in a stock the dividends of which are payable in Eastern currency, involving incessant and troublesome exchange calculations." And the Government persistently replies:—Take our Rupee paper. We will give you 4 per cent. interest, and let you have it at a discount." Every Government on earth but this Government would deem it madness to sell 4 per cent. promissory notes at 97, when they could sell their 3¼ per cent. notes in any quantity at 100. But the India Government, with its own 3½ per cent. notes selling in London at 102 to 102½, was offering in August last, to sell its 4 per cents. in Calcutta, at any discount that might be offered. The legitimate, the natural value of every promissory note of the Government of India, bearing 4 per cent. interest, has long been 118 to 120. The credit of India is such that if the Government would but offer notes of an order that is convenient and not troublesome to capitalists, they may get at par all they like to ask for, and at 3¼ per cent. They reason why we have to offer 4 per cent, and submit to a discount, is, not because our currency is silver, and that the future of silver is uncertain, but that the dividends being payable in an Eastern currency, the stock is a troublesome one to deal in, and therefore unpopular on the Exchange. By resolving not to borrow in sterling we lose the advantage of the national credit. It is of no use to offer 4 per cent. upon paper that the capitalist will not touch. Offer 3 or 3¼ per cent. in a form that capitalists can deal in, and they will give whatever we want.

It is heart-breaking to watch these operations, and to see with what guilty waste the finances of the country are administered. Rupee paper being unpopular, the Government should never issue a note therein, but regard as a sufficient "set-off" to any uncertainty as to the value of silver the enormous gain made by the issue of sterling paper. It is the action of the Indian Government alone that keeps the price of silver low. Any change to wiser action—and it will come when the force of stupidity has spent itself—will bring the price of silver rapidly back to its old value, when we shall have to add to the gigantic loss of our present operations the further gigantic loss of having to repay 60d. for every 50d. we are to-day borrowing. The Chambers of Commerce should no longer tolerate such Government. The remedy is in their hands; and in their hands alone. We shall never see wise Government in India, until public opinion becomes too strong to be set at naught. In view of the Governmental course in the last year only, the Chambers of Commerce should resolve to put an end to the present state of things at once.

THE NEW HARBOUR FOR CALCUTTA.

The question of re-opening the Matla as an additional port to relieve the pressure in the river in Calcutta may be said to have received an impetus on Sunday last, when a party of gentlemen, including the Public Works Minister, the Hon. Mr. Hope, went, at the invitation of Mr. W. Duff Bruce, by special train to Port Canning. Here they embarked on board the Port Commissioners' new steamer the Resolute, Captain Reed, and proceeded down the Matla, round to the Sandheads, returning up the Hughli on Monday afternoon. The guests, whilst going down the Matla, carefully examined the latest charts of that river, receiving from Captain Petley, R. N., the fullest information with regard to the recent surveys which have been made of that important estuary. The opinion arrived at seemed to be generally favourable to the re-opening of the Matla under the charge of the Port Commissioners of Calcutta, when both approaches to the city would be under the same management. The expense of buoying and lighting the channels is estimated at about six lakhs, a comparatively trifling sum, considering the great interests involved. This sum will have to be raised by the Port Commissioners; but as they have already been placed in possession of the most valuable part of the river frontage at Port Canning, there should be no difficulty in their obtaining the required amount. Everything was done on board the steamer to make the party comfortable, the Resolute herself being well adapted for the convenience of passengers as well as for the work for which she was more specially constructed.

INDIA IN PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY. THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

In reply to Mr. Leamy, Mr. J. K. CROSS said: Five appointments have just been made to the Indian Medical Service. I have explained on several occasions that, in justice to students, and on administrative grounds, it is not advisable entirely to discontinue appointments to this service. The candidates were not informed that they have no chance of obtaining permanent employment for at least six years, because this is not the fact. Even under the present stagnation at least twenty-five such appointments are held by officers of six years' service and under, and this number will rapidly increase with the present limited number of appointments. I wish also to point out that these five gentlemen were appointed under the memorandum of 1883, which defines more rigidly the terms of the memorandum of 1879. And, as I pointed out to the hon. member in May last year, the conditions of the memorandum of 1879 have been accurately fulfilled. That memorandum never guaranteed those substantive appointments which alone command the higher rates of pay. I must repeat, therefore, what I said on Thursday last, that no further steps are contemplated.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY. QUARTERMASTERS IN INDIA.

In reply to Mr. Biggar, Mr. CROSS said that the Royal Warrant of June 25, 1881, gave no officer or soldier any right to higher emoluments in India. It was especially laid down that the provisions regarding full pay and allowances did not apply to "our Indian Empire." It is not the case that the pecuniary benefits of the warrant were extended to all ranks except quartermasters. Where the Royal Warrant gave actual promotion, some, but not the full pecuniary benefits of the higher rank were given to regimental officers in India. Representations were made on behalf of the quartermasters and riding-masters, and it was decided to raise the Indian allowances, but not the pay, of those who were of ten years' service and upwards, and these improved rates came into effect from the date of their being granted. The aggregate Indian pay and allowances of those below ten years' service was considered adequate.

THE RAILWAY TO QUETTA.

Lord G. HAMILTON asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether his attention had been directed to a minute written in 1881 by Mr. R. Thompson, then member of the Viceroy's Council, now Governor of Bengal, concerning the destruction of part of the railway to Quetta; and whether he would lay upon the table of the House an estimate of the increased cost to the finances of India caused by the destruction of material and dispersion of establishments collected by the late Government for the purpose of making that very railway to Quetta, which, in 1881, Her Majesty's Government repudiated, but in 1884 they desired to construct.

Mr. CROSS: I have read the minute to which the noble lord directs my attention, and in reply to his question I can only say that we have no data at the India Office which will enable us to form such an estimate as that he asks for. But should it be decided to proceed with the railway to Quetta, the Government of India will, of course, furnish full estimates of the cost of the undertaking, which the noble lord will have an opportunity of comparing with any previous estimates. There are no previous estimates to be found at the India Office.

AFGHANISTAN.

Mr. BOURKE asked when the correspondence between the Government of India and the Ameer of Afghanistan with respect to the defence of the frontier would be produced.

Mr. CROSS: The papers will be pushed forward with all haste. They will probably be ready in about three weeks.

THE SALT-TAX.

In reply to Mr. McCarthy, Mr. J. K. CROSS said: I have read, in the Madras Weekly Mail, the memorial as to the salt-tax, but I am not able to say what reply has been given to it by the Viceroy. The price of salt at Cuddapah in December, 1883, was 17½ seers, or about 35 lbs., the rupee. In December, 1873, it was 16½ seers, or about 33½ lbs., showing that salt is now cheaper than it was ten years ago.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

Lord LYTTON moved for papers showing what communications had passed between Her Majesty's Government and the Russian Government about Merv and Afghanistan since 1881. He explained that his object was to secure a greater amount of attention than had hitherto been given to it for the announcement that the Emperor of Russia had received the subjection of the Merv tribes. Having sketched the geographical position of Merv, and referred to the fertility of its soil and the hardness of its tribes, he stated that it had always been admitted by successive Governors General and other authorities on India, that the advance of Russia on Afghanistan must be dangerous to our Indian possessions. He contended that Russia, having assumed the position she now held in Merv, must interfere with and exercise an influence on affairs in Afghanistan. He felt it unnecessary to go in detail into the assurances of Russia that she had no intention of advancing on Merv. They were numerous and well-known. He mentioned them merely as evidence of the uselessness of diplomatic assurances when they ran counter to national interests or national feeling; but the error of Her Majesty's Government was in having renounced in 1880, and reversed in 1881, the policy previously acted on by England in this matter. In abandoning Candahar they had given up a military position which would have enabled us to prevent a Russian advance through Afghanistan. Regarding this subject as one of great moment, he asked Her Majesty's Government what their policy was in respect of the measures to be adopted by this country in consequence of the possession of Merv by Russia.

The Duke of ARGYLL assumed that the reception by Russia of the subjection of the tribes must be regarded as the annexation of Merv. He held that for such annexation Her Majesty's Government were not responsible. As compared with this country, Russia was not civilised; but as compared with the robber tribes of Central Asia she was civilised, and she was the only Power which could civilise those tribes. In her work of civilising them her advance on Merv had long been inevitable. As to the engagements she had given in reference to Merv, she had not been guilty of any absolute violation of them or of any breach of faith. All her promises on the subject had been so carefully guarded that such a charge could not be established against her. He regretted that successive Cabinets had asked Russia for those assurances, and, without indicating what their policy ought to be, he hoped Her Majesty's Government would not ask Russia for any further assurances. He thought our recent successes in Egypt would have a good effect in India, and he believed that we could contribute to make Afghanistan a strong native State. In any event, our Indian frontier must be secured, and in any measures necessary for that purpose the Government would have the unanimous support of the country.

Lord CRANBROOK defended the policy of the late Government in respect to our Indian frontier.

Lord KIMBERLEY concurred in the latter view. He never had placed too much reliance on the assurances received from Russia. He said that without any disrespect to Russia, but because of the circumstances of the case. At the same time, he could not go the length that the Duke of Argyll did in this matter, because he thought one friendly Government had a right to ask another for assurances in matters concerning their respective interests. He defended the policy of Her Majesty's Government in respect of Candahar, and, with reference to the future, stated that while having full reliance on the ability of this country to maintain its possessions in India, Her Majesty's Government were in communication with the Government of Russia on the subject of fixing a boundary line, not only for the North Western Provinces, but for all that portion of our Indian possessions which might be approached by Russia.

Lord CARNARVON read extracts from statements of members of the Government to show that the Cabinet had not only mismanaged the question, but had not been alive to its importance.

Lord NORTHBROOK did not believe that the authority of Russia in Merv would give Russia any greater influence in Afghanistan than she had gained when she advanced to Bokhara, but he regretted that authority because he thought it was likely to cause difficulties between Russia and Afghanistan, arising out of differences between the Turcomans of Merv and those of Afghanistan. The noble lord entered at considerable length on a retrospective history of the Afghanistan question, and a vindication of Lord RIXON from the charges against him involved in the observations of Lord LYTON. He ridiculed the idea that the possession of Merv by Russia could menace the British possessions in India, while he admitted that inconveniences might arise from Russian interference in Afghanistan.

Lord SALISBURY twitted Lord Northbrook with having devoted so much of his long speech to again thrashing thrashed-out subjects, while giving the House very little information as to the future. Then, applying himself to that part of the noble lord's speech which had reference to his own Viceroyalty, he sarcastically criticised the action of the noble lord when Governor General of India. He expressed his belief that what we had to apprehend was not Russian power, but Russian intrigue, and it was in this view that he did not regard the possession of Merv by the Russians as an unimportant occurrence.

Lord GRANVILLE condemned the action of Lord Salisbury when Secretary for India in respect of the Afghan wars, defended the policy of Her Majesty's Government, and stated that there was no objection to the production of the papers moved for, so far as they were prepared, but they would not include the unfinished correspondence which was now proceeding.

Lord NAPIER of MAGDALA recommended the completion of the railway system in British India.

The motion was then withdrawn.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

EXPORT OF INDIAN WHEAT.

Sir G. BALFOUR asked whether any reports had been received as to the bearing the large export of wheat has had on the food of the people; whether this export had stimulated the extension of cultivation or the substitution of wheat for the other grains previously cultivated; and whether the information and reports on the subject could be made accessible to individuals interested in the important questions involved in the wheat exports.

Mr. J. K. CROSS: In reply to my hon. and gallant friend, I am sorry to say that I cannot give him any very definite information as to the effect of the large wheat export on the food of the people of India. But from a careful examination of the price of food grains in the Punjab and the Central Provinces during the last few years, I find that the large exports are coincident with and doubtless stimulated by, the low prices of wheat and other food grains consequent on the abundant harvests of the last three years. The wheat export of the two years 1879 and 1880 was only 3,200,000 cwt. The price of Jowar and Bajra, the grain mostly used for food, was about 15 seers, or 30lb. to the rupee. In the two years 1882 and 1883, with exports of nearly 34,000,000 cwt., the price of Jowar and Bajra was about 22 seers, or 44lb. to the rupee. The wheat production of the North Western Provinces and Oudh, the Punjab and the Central Provinces, is estimated at 23,000,000 quarters. The difference between a good and bad crop will be at least 5,000,000 quarters, or a quantity equal to the greatest export yet reached. Much valuable information respecting the wheat trade is contained in the "Trade Statement of British India," this year's number of which is now ready for distribution, to which I must refer my hon. and gallant friend.

INTOXICATING DRINKS IN INDIA.

In reply to Mr. O'Donnell, who asked a series of questions with regard to official notices offering for public auction, the right of manufacturing and selling intoxicating drinks in India, and especially in Malabar,

Mr. CROSS said: It is impossible within the limits of a reply to answer the series of questions which the hon. member for Dungarvan has put, and which relate to details of administration under the control of the local Government. But in reply to the last question, which is the really important one, I have to state that the policy declared in 1843 and 1844 is still strictly adhered to. The number of liquor shops in Bengal has been reduced from 9,155 in 1844 to 4,560 last year, and in the Bombay Presidency from 2,976 in 1877 to 2,479 last year. In both provinces, as generally throughout India, the excise on liquor has been greatly enhanced of late years.

THE SALT TAX IN INDIA.

Mr. J. M'CARTHY asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether the salt tax in India was now exactly double what it was in the time of the East India Company in 1858; whether the salt tax was now two rupees per maund against one rupee in 1858, and whether nine-tenths of the price natives paid for salt go to Government as a tax.

Mr. J. K. CROSS: To the first two clauses of the question I must reply in the negative. The salt tax was in 1858 in Bengal two rupees eight annas per maund; in Upper India two rupees; in Madras and Bombay twelve annas to one rupee. It has now been equalised throughout India at two rupees. To the last clause I must also reply in the negative. The mean average selling price of salt, including the tax, was in December, 1883, in Madras, two rupees thirteen annas; in Bombay, three rupees twelve annas; in the North West Provinces, three rupees twelve annas; in the Punjab, three rupees two annas; and in Bengal, three rupees fifteen annas.

Major-General Sir John Ross, K.C.B., commanding Poona, having proceeded on leave to Bombay, Colonel Nimmo, commanding 28th Regiment N.L., has assumed command of the station during his absence.

The Bombay Government have been taking energetic measures lately in connection with the sanitary improvement of the cantonment of Nusserebad. Attention has been given to the proposed issue of preserved vegetables (when fresh vegetables are not procurable) and of pure milk to the troops, and of gram for the feeding of commissariat sheep. The erection of an isolated building to the leeward of the hospital and barracks for the reception of special cases during the seasons when cholera is known to break out, has been decided upon; and other matters have been settled satisfactorily.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MARCH 11, 1884.

MR. SETON-KARR ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

ONE of the most valuable and instructive papers that have yet appeared on the Bengal Tenancy Bill, was read before the Society of Arts last Friday evening, by Mr. Seton-Karr, with Sir George Campbell in the chair. Mr. Seton-Karr, as a Bengal district officer of great experience, as a judge of the High Court, and finally, as Lord Lawrence's trusted and honoured Foreign Secretary, speaks with the greatest weight on the vexed question to which he has addressed himself; whilst Sir George Campbell is, in himself, the embodiment of a whole school of thought on this subject. The presence of such recognised authorities as Mr. Buckland, Sir George Yule, Mr. Campbell, Sir William Rose Robinson, and Sir James Caird, with that amiable and accomplished Oudh nobleman, the Raja Rampal Singh, gave to the meeting a political importance far greater than that which might attach to a much more numerous gathering of the general public; and we cannot doubt that Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert will accord due consideration, both to the paper of the able lecturer and to the discussion which followed upon it.

Mr. Seton-Karr has been known throughout his official life as an ardent friend of the interests of the ryots. There are not wanting, indeed, those who fear that Mr. Seton-Karr's devotion to this one point may have sometimes led him to attach too much importance to a supposed, but very unreal, divergence between the interests of the Bengal ryot and those of the Bengal zemindar. We are of those who believe that this divergence, invented by some greedy politicians who would fain break down the protection accorded to the zemindars by the Permanent Settlement, is absolutely non-existent. We believe that the protection afforded by that Settlement, supplemented by subsequent legislation and subsequent judicial decisions, to the interests of the ryots, is fully as efficient as that which it affords to the zemindars. We are therefore heartily glad to find that Mr. Seton-Karr, whilst he approves of a certain amount of fresh legislation—and is even disposed to assent to some of the clauses so the Bengal Tenancy Bill—emphatically disapproves of many of the most characteristic and most essential provisions of that most ill-advised and unjust measure. We hope to give a full report of his instructive speech, and of the whole of the proceedings, in our next issue; but in the meantime, we note with pleasure that Mr. Seton-Karr can hardly find language enough to express his surprise and dismay at the clauses of the Bill legalising a monstrous system of “compensation for disturbance,” and the singularly oppressive restrictions of the landlord's rights in regard to his own Khamar or demesne lands. He condemns with equal warmth the general tendency of the Bill to foster litigation, and to bring the landlord and tenant into Court at every turn. It will thus be seen that—if we only except the “free sale” clauses of the measure, which we (in common with perhaps the majority of those who know Bengal) believe will reduce the ryots to a condition of serfdom under the money-lenders—Mr. Seton-Karr appears to agree in the main with the conclusions of those who are most hostile to the Bill. And it is highly worthy of note that the point excepted above—on which Mr. Seton-Karr appeared to be doubtful, or perhaps on the whole favourable to the Bill—is exactly the one which is most objected to by many of those who are otherwise inclined to support the Bill. Unless we misunderstood Sir James Caird, that experienced economist expressed surprise that Mr. Seton-Karr should have lavished all his sympathy on the well-to-do joidar, and reserved none for the poor under-tenants, who will, in our opinion, become serfs of the mahajuns if this Bill becomes law. And we hope we do not misrepresent Sir George Campbell when we say that his speech seemed to show a strong under-current of sympathy and anxiety for the fate of the same class. The speech of Mr. Roger Lethbridge, in total uncompromising opposition to the Bill, received the strongest support from the telling words of Mr. Campbell, who unhesitatingly threw the whole weight of his great local experience and knowledge into the same scale, and gave some striking illustrations of the mischief that is threatened by the unfortunate proposals of the Government of India:

THE HISTORY OF THE BHINGA RAJ FAMILY, OUDH.

THE history of India, as a whole, will never be thoroughly understood or adequately appreciated until we have in every Province, and even in every district, accessible materials for detailed local history. The advantage of possessing rich materials in an English form has been well illustrated by sundry articles and pamphlets by our foremost Indian Sanskritist and historian, Dr. Rajendralala Mitra; and we are glad to find that the example set by the learned doctor is being followed by other distinguished Indian gentlemen. We have before us a history of the Bhinga Raj family of Oudh, compiled by the Raja himself; and we have no hesitation in saying that the side-light which this little work casts on the general history of the Province is a most valuable one. The Bhinga Raj family, like that of the Gonda and some twelve other chiefs in Oudh, is descended from the illustrious Bishwen race, which has for centuries borne a leading part in all important movements in that country. Of the position of this race in the Hindu hierarchy, Dr. Rajendralala Mitra speaks as follows, in a passage quoted by the Raja :—

"The Bishwens are of a race of the sage Mayur Bhatta (Muni Vansa) on the paternal side, and of a Solar line (Surya Vansa) on the maternal side. They intermarry with the Kahatriyas of high caste, but in all their rites and ceremonies, they strictly adhere to the observances of Brahmins. They are Vaidics in religion, and it is said that fifty-two Somayagas or rites connected with the sacrifice with the 'moon plant' have been performed by the several branches of this family up to the present time. They intermarry with the Bhagel, the Chandel, the Gaharvar, the Maulihar (Surya Vansa) and the Srinet families; but only take, and do not give, daughters in marriage from the Rajkumar, the Kaushik, the Ujjain, the Gautam, the Kalhans, the Bandhulgotri, the Haiho Vansa, the Kolinpuriya, and the Janavar families."

The Raja of Bhinga, in the course of his interesting narrative of the fortunes of his house, gives some valuable details of the history of the allied Raj families of Majhauri and Gonda. Altogether we look on the publication of this account as an important contribution to the history of the Province of Oudh.

DISSOLUTION OF THE LONDON COMMITTEE OF THE ANGLO-INDIAN DEFENCE ASSOCIATION.

THE following letter has been addressed to the members of the London Committee of the Anglo-Indian Defence Association, by Sir A. J. Arbuthnot, K.C.S.I., President of the Committee :—

"Newtown House, near Newbury, March 10, 1884.

"SIR,—The Bill commonly known as the Ilbert Bill having been passed by the Legislative Council of the Governor-General in a form which is considered to afford sufficient safeguards to European British subjects in India, it appears to me that the time has arrived for dissolving the "Anglo-Indian Defence Association," which was formed in this country in June last for the purpose of procuring the withdrawal of the Bill; and I have, therefore, the honour to inform you that the Association in question is now dissolved. In making this announcement I wish to add that I feel sure that I am only expressing the opinion of every member of the Executive Committee, and of the members of the Association generally, when I say that our warmest acknowledgments are due to our Honorary Secretary, Mr. ROYER LETHBRIDGE, for his unwearied and very efficient efforts to promote the objects of the Association. I believe that the idea of forming this Association, and of thereby bringing to bear upon the discussion of the important questions involved in the Ilbert Bill the opinions of retired Anglo-Indians of all classes originated with Mr. LETHBRIDGE; and I am able to affirm that whatever success may have attended the operations of the Association is largely due to the zeal and ability with which Mr. LETHBRIDGE has devoted himself to its working.—I have the honour to be, sir, your very obedient servant,

ALEX. J. ARBUTHNOT.

President of the Anglo-Indian Defence Association (London Committee).

The battalions for England next trooping season are the 1st Essex, late 44th, from Aden; 2nd East Surrey, late 70th, from Bareilly; 1st Royal Irish, late 18th, from Meerut. They will be replaced by their sister battalions, all of which are at present on the Mediterranean station. The 31st (1st East Surrey) and the 2nd Royal Irish were reported by telegram as having been ordered there, whilst the 56th have been some time at Gibraltar. It is said that the present complications in Egypt are not likely to alter this arrangement, whatever it may do with the following year's reliefs, for which the Horse Guards have down the 2nd Durham, late 68th, 1st Oxford late 43rd, and 1st South Lancashire, late 40th Regiment.

Lieutenant J. W. Hutehinson, late 23rd N. L. I., has proceeded to join the 4th Sikh Infantry at Edwardesabad, to which he has recently been posted.

MAIL NEWS.

The Viceroy, Lady Ripon, and party arrived at Calcutta on Feb. 19, after their trip to Ceylon in the steamer Olive. The Commander in Chief and General Sir Frederick Roberts arrived at the Presidency by train on Monday, the latter having spent a day at Allahabad as the guest of Sir Alfred Lyall.

The visit of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught to Agra has come to an end, and the party have proceeded to Fatehgarh.

Mr. Rivers Thompson has recovered so completely in health that it is probable he may not, after all, avail himself of the leave to England for which he had made arrangements. He was to have made over charge of the Province to Mr. Bernard about the 9th proximo.

The Budget will, we understand, be published as a Resolution in the Gazette of India, this year, early in March. It will be a short and unpretentious statement.

The falling off in the opium revenue has been a somewhat serious one, and next year's sales will be reduced, though the reserve will even then have to be drawn upon to furnish the necessary supply to the market. The salt tax is making healthy progress, but the revenue is still far below that which the higher rate of taxation realised.

The report of the Opium Commission is still under consideration of the Bengal Government, and is not likely to be disposed of for some little time to come.

Mr. W. Duthoit, LL.D., succeeds Mr. H. J. Sparks in the Judicial Commissionership of Oudh, when the latter quits that appointment, as he is about to do.

The Honourable Mr. T. C. Hope, Public Works Minister, will proceed on a short tour between the break-up of the Government at Calcutta and the reassembling in Simla. Mr. Hope will visit the Sukkur Bridge on the Indus Valley Railway.

The temporary vacancy which occurs in the Board of Revenue of the North West Provinces on the retirement of Mr. Carmichael next month, pending the return of Mr. Bazett Colvin at the end of April, will be filled, we understand, by the Hon. Mr. J. W. Quinton.

Sir Alfred Lyall returned from Agra to Allahabad on Feb. 15. He has quite recovered from his slight recent indisposition.

We see it stated that Mr. Cordery, the Resident at Hyderabad, is going on furlough. Mr. Cordery only purposes taking privilege leave, and that not at present; nor until the administration is working smoothly.

The Viceroy has contributed Rs.1,000 to the fund for the support of the Bareilly College.

His Highness the Maharajah of Benares has obtained great benefit from an operation performed on one of his eyes by Dr. Cayley, assisted by Dr. Hooper. The sight of the eye, which had been completely lost for nearly a year, is now fully restored.

Mr. W. B. Jones, Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, is now, we are concerned to hear, compelled to take six months' leave to Europe for the benefit of his health. Mr. A. P. Howell may possibly officiate in the Central Provinces during his absence.

Mr. W. R. Furnivall, C.E., who has just completed the construction of the Bengal Central Railway, leaves for Hyderabad early next month, as Agent and Chief Engineer of the Nizam's new line.

THE VICEROY AT HAIDARABAD.

THE advice formally addressed by the Viceroy of India to the Nizam of Haidarabad at the installation ceremony of the youthful feudal prince, may possibly, some day, attain the dignity of an important historical document. It contains some passages which indicate clearly that Lord Ripon fully appreciates the nature of the dangers which he is encountering in entrusting the government of the State of Haidarabad, with a population of ten millions of people, to two very young gentlemen whose united ages do not amount to forty-one. In the interests of that vast population it is most earnestly to be hoped that the influence which Lord Ripon has exerted in placing Liak Ali at the head of the administration in Haidarabad has been exercised wisely. It would almost seem, from the unusually plain and most uncourtly terms in which he offered most valuable advice to the young prince and his still more youthful adviser, that he is somewhat apprehensive as to the results of his policy.

The dramatic rapidity with which the final decision as to the rival claims of the Perishkar and Liak Ali was arrived at, will form one of the most picturesque, and possibly one of the most momentous incidents in the modern history of Haidarabad. It was scarcely an edifying, and it was certainly not a dignified spectacle—that by which, through a rapid stage change, five minutes before the opening of the durbar, the assembled chiefs were suddenly informed, in almost unnecessarily sensational manner, that the long-pending struggle between the two rival factions had, at length, been brought to a close. Surely, Lord Ripon, the excellence of whose intentions in the use of the great influence which he must have exercised in settling the future of Haidarabad cannot be doubted, might have been able, with the advice of the British Resident, to bring the contest to a conclusion at an earlier date. That Mr. Cordery enjoys the complete confidence of the Viceroy is evident from the emphatic terms in which he advised the Nizam to be guided in his administration by the experienced counsel of the British Resident. It is to be regretted, therefore, that his Excellency did not avail himself of Mr. Cordery's special knowledge at an earlier stage in the proceedings. When we have fuller details of the political occurrences which have actually taken place at Haidarabad during the past week, it may also possibly be found that there is cause for regret in the fact that no successful attempt has been made to utilise the services of the Peishkar—whose experience, at all events, it is impossible to deny—whatever may have been his shortcomings as an administrator—in the interests of the two illustrious young gentlemen to whom Lord Ripon has considered it wise to hand over the destinies of a State as large as an average European kingdom. It is one of the disadvantages of the mode in which the business of practical politics is carried on in an Indian native State, that the system of Government is so entirely that of one party, without the assistance—for that represents the nature of the service performed by an able opposition—of distinguished persons whose views do not altogether coincide with those of the supreme authorities. The suddenly developed desire of the Peishkar to perform a religious function at Benaras, and the equally rapidly created conviction in the mind of his Mohammadan coadjutor that it is his duty to become a Hadji, show conclusively that it has been intimated to these experienced statesmen that their immediate departure from Haidarabad is considered desirable—both in their own interests and in those of their opponents. But it might have been possible for Lord Ripon—in the intervals between durbars and banquets—to explain to the Nizam and Liak Ali that their action in this matter would be regarded in Europe as very poor politics and worse diplomacy.

ON DUTY UNDER A TROPICAL SUN.

FOR
The maintenance of Health and Bodily comfort and the Treatment of Simple Diseases; with Remarks on Clothing and Equipment for the Guidance of Travellers in Tropical

MAJOR S. LEIGH HUNT, Madras Army.

AND
ALEXANDER S. KENNY, M.R.C.S.E., A.K.C.
Senior Demonstrator of Anatomy at King's College
London; Author of "The Tissues and their Structure"
London: W. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, Waterloo-place; S.W.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"We cannot imagine a more useful companion for any who may be going to the tropics; it ought to be considered a necessary item in the outfit."—Land and Water.

"By attending to the instructions which are given in this eminently practical work, the traveller or sojourner in tropical countries will learn how he may not only tolerate but enjoy life in them."—Broad Arrow.

"This is a small book, but a very useful one, being full of valuable hints as to how Europeans may best preserve their health in hot countries. Of particular value are the chapters on diet, dress, and equipment, matters of the first consequence to the preservation of physical health."—Globe.

"The author's suggestions and remarks are based on the most practical experience. The book contains a good deal in a small space, and should be invaluable to all who have to go to the tropics."—Saturday Review.

"The value of the work is enhanced by the fact that the writers have limited themselves solely to suggestions which have arisen in their personal experience, and every intending visitor to a tropical climate would do well to take the book (which is small and concise) in his kit."—Morning Post.

"The soldier, the traveller, the sportsman, are told not only how to ward off the most common diseases and inconveniences, but how to deal with the former in the absence of a medical man."—Vanity Fair.

"This is a small work, but it contains in less than 140 pages an amount of valuable information and experience that might well have filled a volume twice its size."—Overland Mail.

"The facts the authors are anxious to convey are laid down clearly and concisely, and in as few words as possible.
It may be said to represent a sort of little medical mouse, capable of making a hole in the network of tropical disease sufficiently large to allow many victims to escape."—Homeward Mail.

"It should be invaluable to young men going abroad, and of great use even to those who have some experience."
—Allen's Indian Mail.

"Gentlemen whose duties may lead them to take up residence, either temporarily or permanently, in the East, will find a great deal that is useful in this volume."—Sportsman.

"This is a very practical handbook of suggestions for the guidance of travellers in tropical countries. The compilers have limited themselves to suggestions which have arisen solely in their personal experience in Egypt, India, Burmah, Australia, &c., and their work will be found a most valuable modus vivendi for any travellers camping out or roughing it."—Life.

"This is a book of very marked value to all who reside in the tropics. It contains practical suggestions for the maintenance of health and bodily comfort, and the treatment of simple diseases, with hints on diet, clothes and equipment for both travellers and residents. It is replete with valuable advice founded on experience, and tempered with sound sense, and has the no small advantage of saying all it has to say with great conciseness."—Home News.

A RIDE TO KHIVA

BY CAPTAIN FRED BURNABY,
Royal Horse Guards.

Says page 13:—"Two pairs of boots lined with fur were also taken; and for physic—with which it is as well to be supplied when travelling in out-of-the-way places—some quinine and Cocker's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the natives of Central Khiva with the greatest possible success. In fact, the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him five.

COCKLE'S PILLS

will never fade from my memory; and a friend of mine, who passed through the same district many months afterwards, informed me that my fame as a "medicine man" had not died out, but that the marvellous cure was even then a theme of conversation in the bazaar."

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION
OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give with a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 200 millions of our fellow-subjects.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHS,
COLD,
ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC

DIARRHOEA, DYSENTERY.
GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "A DOSE COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHOEA." From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London. OMAH SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances of the efficacy of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhoea, and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhoea, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 184, Russell St., W.C.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE IS THE TRUM
PALLIATIVE IN
TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN OF EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,
PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSUBSTANTIAL IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. Is 1/4d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d.

55a. ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MARCH 18, 1884.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, Feb. 29; Madras and Allahabad, Feb. 27; Calcutta, Feb. 26.

THE Hindoo Patriot to hand by last mail, has the following on the progress of the mischievous Bengal Tenancy Bill:—

"We believe it is now definitely settled that the Bengal Tenancy Bill will not be passed this session. Although the Select Committee are unremitting in their industry—they meet thrice a week for nearly four hours each sitting—still they have not been able to go through more than half the Bill yet. It is true that they will be able to proceed much faster with the later sections of the Bill, which involve less controversial points, but we doubt whether the first revise of the Bill by the Select Committee will be ready before the middle of March. The revised Bill will be published for general information and will not be taken up by the Council till November next. In the meantime it is stated that the Lieutenant Governor will appoint a moving Commission for the purpose of testing the adaptability of the provisions of the Bill to the circumstances of different districts. We had said before that the appointment of this Commission would be like putting the cart before the horse. Such a Commission ought to have preceded the Bill. But if a Commission is to be appointed, we hope it will be appointed on a broad basis. We would recommend that the new Commission be formed on the lines of the Indigo Commission of 1860, consisting of both official and non-official members, and that a law be passed to enable it to take evidence on oath."

In regard to this proposed commission, we are sorry to say that there is a very circumstantial rumour afloat, to the effect that Lord Ripon's Government is once more going to have recourse to "sharp practice," in its frantic endeavours to gain its point. It is said that the commission will indeed issue, but that it will be so ingeniously "packed," that—whilst to the general public its constitution will seem representative—the broad tenour of its deliberations will be a foregone conclusion.

SURELY, the issue of all the "Renterising" and of the other shady incidents of last year cannot have been so satisfactory to the Government of India as to make Lord Ripon tolerant of such tactics in the case of the Tenancy Bill. A commission consisting of Mr. Reynolds, Mr. Edgar, a Native Deputy Magistrate, and Mr. Gibbon, would be a sham, pure and simple.

THE pretence has long since been exploded that Mr. Gibbon in any way represents the views of the zemindars—or even of the planters, except a very small knot of exceedingly selfish Behar planters, who regard only the accidents of their own personal position, and not the general interests of their body. With such able and keen partisans as Mr. Reynolds and Mr. Edgar to lead the commission, we all know the spectacles through which all the facts will be regarded. It would not be difficult to draft beforehand a report, which should substantially convey the recommendation certain to be made under these circumstances. Is this English fair play?

THE rumoured packing of this Tenancy Bill Commission is exactly on the lines followed in the nomination of the Education Commission some two years ago—except that the present case is more flagrant. The plan seems to be, to nominate first the very ablest and the keenest supporters of the views of the Government; and then (as an illusory homage to decency) to water the list by the addition either of very moderate supporters of the other side, as in the case of the Education Commission—or of merely nominal supporters of the other side, as in the present case.

THAT this is exceedingly unfair is obvious on the face of it. On a commission that is intended to be impartial we should either have no keen partisans at all, or else partisans equally keen on both sides.

WE are glad to observe that Mr. Gorst has given notice that on Thursday he will ask a question as to the composition of this commission.

THE Budget is, of course, the Indian event of the week. We deal with its main features in our leading columns.

THE meeting of the National Indian Association yesterday in Exeter Hall, was a great success. We hope to be able to give some account of it elsewhere.

WE learn that a strong and united effort will be made to urge on the attention of the present Government, the opinion now prevalent throughout India in independent circles, that the seclusion at Simla, during the greater part of each year, of the whole of the personnel of the Supreme Administration of the Empire has become a political danger of the first magnitude.

COLONEL OLCOTT, the president of the Theosophical Society which has lately been making progress in India, is expected in London in a few days, having come to this country on a short visit in connection with some business interesting the Buddhist population of Ceylon. The Theosophical Society, a branch of which has been established in London, now reckons nearly a hundred branches in different parts of India, and we do not know how many thousand members. Colonel Olcott will be the guest in the first instance of Mr. A. P. Sinnett, at 7, Ladbroke-gardens, W., and will probably during his stay in London give some lectures explanatory of the movement with which he is concerned.

THE Theosophical Society, we understand, represents no specific sect or dogmatic opinion, and, in the religious aspect, may be regarded as a body of inquirers into spiritual truth or science. As its objects are defined in its own publications, they are: "First, to form the nucleus of a universal brotherhood of humanity, without distinction of race, creed, or colour. Second, to promote the study of Aryan and other Eastern literature, religions and sciences, and vindicate its importance. Third, to investigate the hidden mysteries of Nature and the psychical powers latent in man." Many members of the Society are emphatic in their declarations that great and unforeseen avenues of knowledge have been opened up by its means within the last year or two, in connection with the inquiries which, in pursuance of the third object, it has been carrying on.

THE Times of India has the following:—

"Mr. W. F. Whitehead, late sub-editor of the Bombay Gazette, has left this city for Calcutta to join the editorial staff of the Indian Daily News. His removal from Bombay, where he had resided for upwards of eight years, is a loss to the Rifle Volunteer Corps, of which he had been a member from its formation. He was one of the best marksmen in the corps, and carried off a large number of prizes, including two championship gold medals. He also held for some time a commission in the late Captain Tennent's company."

THE announcement of a new novel to appear almost at once, from the charming pen of Mr. J. W. Sherer, C.S.I., is one that will be received with special pleasure by our friends in every station in India. Mr. Sherer's style, as graceful as it is entertaining, is well known to all Anglo-Indians; and we are confident that his new work—which is entitled "Henry Nightingale, the History of a Family Secret"—will obtain as favourable a reception in England as that which is already assured for it in India.

THE Hindoo Patriot says:—"The prospects of Port Canning are brightening up. The Hon. Mr. T. C. Hope, our Public Works Minister, accompanied by Mr. Duff Bruce, Vice-Chairman of the Port Commissioners and a few other gentlemen visited Mutla on the 12th inst. They went down the Mutla channel and came round by the Sandheads on their return to Calcutta. This visit was a sort of preliminary inspection of the port and its approaches in view to making it an auxiliary to Calcutta, which is considered overcrowded. The cost of buoying and lighting the Port would be about six lakhs."

An enterprising publisher is engaged in publishing the lives of some of the ancient poets of Bengal. The series will comprise for the present the lives of Bidyapati, Chundidas, and Govindas. The publisher is Babu Sasibhusun Mukerjee, manager of the Indian Echo.

THE Times of India gives the following obituary notice for the week ending Feb. 29:—"Surgeon A. Hickman, M.D.; Mr. Richard Van Gelder, barrister-at-law, Bankipore."

THE Englishman has the following on the Calcutta Freight Market for the week ending Feb. 26:—

"We have very little to report upon during the past week. Canal rates have experienced a decline caused by several steamers on the loading berth being anxious to fulfil their requirements, whilst for forward loading some of the liners have also accepted slightly easier rates. By Cape, on the contrary, owing to the firmness of owners, the only vessels that have fixed during the week have succeeded in obtaining a fair advance on previous quotations."

WITH respect to the Indigo Market, Messrs. W. Moran & Co., report as follows:—

"The bulk of the stock that remained unsold at date of our last issue, has been disposed of by private sale. So far as regards the New Crop, it is too early in the season for us to give any advices of interest. We can only remark generally that prospects are not so good as they were at the corresponding period of last year, either in Behar or Lower Bengal, owing to the short rainfall of last season, and consequent lack of moisture. In some of the Zillahs of Lower Bengal, there have been a few local showers, and some spring sowings have been put in. In Behar sowings have been commenced here and there on a small scale, but the weather is reported as rather unsettled. We are not likely to hear much of interest from the Benares Provinces or the Doab for some months to come."

THE same firm gives the following with respect to the Tea Market:—

"The sales on the 21st inst. comprised 8,904 chests, of which 8,654 were sold. Prices were again lower for teas over seven annas by about half to one anna per pound, and under that price by about half an anna. Reports from manufacturing districts are satisfactory, and point to a rather earlier season than usual."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following telegrams are from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated March 14 and 16:—

"Sir Auckland Colvin, in his Financial Statement, gives the following figures, showing the net result to the State from its connection with the railways during the five years:—

"In 1880-81, loss £50,612; in 1881-82, gain £1,035,342; in 1882-83, gain £419,343; in 1883-84, (revised estimates), gain £787,530; and in 1884-85, (estimates) gain £1,079,240. The net gain in the five years is £3,270,843.

"He says that the Government is indebted to Mr. Rivett Carnac, opium agent at Benares, for some successful experiments in the preparation of Malwa opium into a form suited for local consumption, experiments which, in 1882, set free 1,372, and in 1883 3,000 chests of provision opium, or opium available for export, at a profit to the Government of Rs 1,94,845 in the former, and of Rs 7,56,347 in the latter year. The net receipts under the head of opium for the ensuing year, after deducting the cost of production, are now estimated at £6,241,300, against £7,619,700 in the revised estimates issued last March. Notwithstanding a very large reduction in sales during 1884, the reserve on December 31 next is estimated at 2,296 chests only. Any excess in production over sales during the ensuing year will be used to strengthen the reserve.

"Sir Auckland Colvin replies at some length to the charges of extravagant expenditure brought against the Indian Government, and summarises his remarks on this subject as follows:—

"The Government of India, in its character of railway constructor and in its control of various industrial or commercial operations, undertakes large, varied, and expensive enterprises which, although for the most part highly remunerative, necessarily add to the sum total of its expenditure. It constructs railways and telegraphs, conserves or creates forests, makes and excavates salt, provides saving-banks, digs canals and tanks, organises and controls mechanical workshops and foundries, prospects for coal, furnishes funds for agricultural or industrial experiments, and subscribes to economical exhibitions. It holds a large opium monopoly, the cost of which varies with the seasons.

"It is not even completely master of its own expenses, which, so far as they are increased in England, may to a great extent be said to be beyond its control, the partnership of the English and Indian Governments in army charges, for example being liable to sudden and unforeseen fluctuations. Apparent increases or decreases in expenditure, again, are often due to adjustments of the accounts, and these, owing to the relations of the Imperial and Provincial Governments are further complicated, and certain to mislead on a superficial examination.

"Finally, much of the misconception constantly met with in criticisms of the expenditure of the Government is due to the faultiness or carelessness of the method employed by the inquirer the estimates being compared with actual prosperous cycles and with famine cycles, and disturbing elements being unquestioningly admitted into the calculation."

"At a meeting of the Legislative Council to-day Sir Stewart Bayley presented the report of the Select Committee on the Bengal Tenancy Bill. No discussion was held. The report will not be published till next week, as minutes of dissent to be presented by several members are not yet ready."

"Disturbances, apparently due to oppression on the part of the provincial Governor, have occurred in Northern Burmah, and some fears have been felt respecting the safety of Bhamo. According to the latest news, the King's troops have attacked and defeated the rebels.

"The Rangoon Gazette states that King Thebaw has published a proclamation announcing important reforms in the administration. The civil list and budget are to be prepared by officials, who will be paid fixed salaries. The country is to be divided into ten districts, each under a Commissioner."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

MAJOR GOWAN'S INDEX TO MR. MARVIN'S "RUSSIAN CAMPAIGN AGAINST THE TURCOMANS."*

This is the third of the series of indices which Major Gowan has published to Mr. Marvin's works on Central Asia. Its elaborate character may be estimated from the fact that it consists of 220 pages of letterpress, excellently arranged, so as to practically serve as a concordance as well as an ordinary index. To the statesman, political writer and scholar, Major Gowan's indices are simply invaluable; they ought to be found in every library where Mr. Marvin's books exist. In fine, they are indispensable, since Mr. Marvin's books are rapidly assuming the character of a library in themselves. Since the spring of 1880, when he first essayed writing on the Central Asian question, he has published five works and four pamphlets, and in a few weeks will have completed two more. Excluding the pamphlets, these seven books consist of more than 2,500 pages, illustrated with 50 pictures and 36 maps. After this, no one will be inclined to dispute that Mr. Marvin has written more upon the Central Asian question than any person living. And every one of his works has been a success. Even his pamphlets—in spite of pamphlets being considered an almost extinct form of literature nowadays—have all of them hit their mark. His "Russian Railway to Herat and India" caused such a stir as to operate in modifying the Government policy towards Afghanistan. His "Baku" ran rapidly into a second thousand, while his "Annexation of Merv" passed into a second edition in a few days after issue. Owing to peculiar circumstances, none of his works have lost their original importance, as is too often the case with books of a political character. When, the day after the announcement of the annexation of Merv, the Novoe Vremya published ten columns on the oasis, nearly the whole of the matter was translated from his "Merv, the Queen of the World." The organ of the Caucasus Government, the Kavkaz, on its part, made use of his "Russians at Merv and Herat." We mention these facts to show that Major Gowan, in undertaking the indexing of Mr. Marvin's works has not spent his labours on books that have passed out of date. For years to come Mr. Marvin's series must continue to be the reference books of statesmen and generals in England and India, and hence Major's Gowan's undertaking is of national importance. On the Continent such a task would have been taken in hand by the State itself, or, rather, a demand for it could never have arisen at all, since the State would have absorbed Mr. Marvin and his energies long ago, instead of letting them dissipate their force on paper. But the contrary being the case in England, we can only congratulate the Government that the indexing of Mr. Marvin's books should have been taken in hand by an officer of talent and reputation, and admittedly the first Russian scholar in India.

REPRESENTATION OF THE BENGAL PLANTERS IN COUNCIL.

IN our issue of the 4th inst., a letter signed "Indigo" drew attention to the non-representation of the Bengal planters on the Rent Bill Committee. Our correspondent pointed out that, whilst the Behar planters are represented, and ably represented in Council, the Bengal planters are absolutely without any representative whatsoever. Those who are acquainted with the circumstances of Bengal and Behar are aware that whereas in the one province the planters are all zemindars, in the other the great bulk of them are tenure-holders or ryots. The interest of the two are diametrically opposed to each other. Our correspondent, therefore, has a strong case when he demands that a representative of the Bengal planting interests should be included among the members of the Select Committee on the same principle upon which the Behar planters are represented. Section 58 of the Bill, as it stands, threatens the interests of Behar indigo planters in a very vital manner. That section enacts that a money rent paid by an occupancy ryot shall be presumed to be fair and equitable, and shall continue to be paid by him until it is enhanced or reduced under the Act. Now it is well known that ryots holding under indigo planters are allowed to hold at favourable rates on the condition of their growing indigo. Those rates, under the Act, shall be deemed fair and equitable, and the ryot will now be able to snap his fingers at the planter and refuse to grow indigo until such time as these rents are still further reduced, or some arrangement equally favourable to the ryot is made.

This is a section that will, of course, not escape the vigilance of the representative of the Behar planting community, and, if even it be not struck out of the amended Bill, Behar planters will have the consolation of knowing that their interests were watched over by one of their own members, and that the injury which this section must entail upon them will have been pointed out. Whilst this one section affects the interest of the Behar planters, there is hardly a section in the Bill which does not materially injure the interests of the unrepresented Bengal zemindar planter. "Indigo" also alludes to the secrecy with which the proceedings of the Select Committee are involved. One would have supposed that a Bill affecting the interests of almost the entire agricultural community of Bengal would have been discussed in the most open and public manner; that every ray of light thrown upon the subject would have been welcomed by men professing to legislate for the good of the community. In England, where the people are represented in Parliament, the proceedings of select committees are not kept secret. There might be some reason for it there, for the Government might not unnaturally tell the public that they were represented by the members whom they sent to the House of Commons, and that those members were qualified and competent to look after the interests of the community which they represented. The columns of the press, or the gossip of the clubs, or of places where men most do congregate, is the only means whereby the opinion of the public in this country can be known. If the proceedings therefore of a Committee, held for the purpose of considering the most important measure that has been proposed since the Permanent Settlement, are to be hidden and secret, the public and those who are interested in the Bill have a fair ground for complaint. Still more so has that section of the public the interests of which are threatened, and which is absolutely unrepresented on the Council or in the Select Committee.

Of course, if the position taken up by Radicals, that they are the only people who know what is good for the community, and that true freedom consists in implicit obedience to their dogmas, be openly acknowledged to be the principle upon which legislation connected with the land in Bengal is to be carried out, there is nothing more to say. We would merely point out the inconsistency of the policy which two years ago declared that the people of India were fit to govern themselves, with the policy that will not give those people an opportunity of knowing what is being done regarding a measure which is destined to change all agricultural relations in Bengal. Free and open discussion of a measure of such vital importance would, we should have imagined, have imparted the very life-breath into a sound statesmanlike measure. Opinions as to the necessity for legislation at all, and as to the direction legislation should take, are so diverse that it is but probable that some useful criticism might be evoked were the proceedings of the Committee made public. Submitting those proceedings to public opinion could not possibly harm the measure or its advocates. As it is, we have the spectacle before us of a measure dealing with all the landed property of Bengal and Behar, brought forward without a particle of evidence to show the necessity for it, without any local inquiry to ascertain the needs of the various parts of the country in the way of land reform, with the recorded opinion of several of the most experienced officials in Bengal against its expediency, and discussed by a Select Committee upon which a most important section of those affected by it is totally unrepresented, and is, moreover, not allowed to know what is going on regarding a matter which concerns most nearly the interests of that section.—Englishman.

THE CHOLERA GERM.

IT is satisfactory to be able to announce to our readers one of the most important discoveries which it has fallen to the lot of scientific men to make in modern times. Drs. Koch, Fischer, and Gaffky, the commission appointed by the German Government to investigate the origin and causes of cholera, have succeeded in discovering the cholera germ in the tank water of Calcutta. Our readers may remember that, when cholera broke out in Egypt last year, the various European Governments entertained grave apprehensions as to the probable spread of the disease. Prince Bismarck, with that constitutional forethought and wisdom for which he is proverbial, appointed Dr. Koch president of the German Commission, with Drs. Fischer and Gaffky as colleagues, to proceed to Egypt and investigate the disease on the spot. The result of their investigations was the discovery of a micro-organism in the lower part of the small intestine. These bacilli were invariably present in all recent cases of cholera, and they were found more or less abundantly in the vomit, and always in the evacuations of patients suffering from the disease. They were found in most abundance in and around the follicles of the lower bowels, and they had penetrated the villi and set up irritations sufficient to account for the disease. To show, however, the connection between the bacteria discovered and the disease, it was necessary to prove that these micro-organisms, on being introduced by inoculation or otherwise into the body of a healthy subject, would induce cholera. Dr. Koch and his colleagues by a variety of experiments, endeavoured to complete the proof of their discovery, but, for various reasons which we need not detail, they were unable to do so in Egypt. Cholera, at the time the investigations were being carried on, was daily decreasing in virulence, and if the subject was to be followed out to its legitimate conclusion, it could only be by a fresh set of experiments in a locality where cholera was prevalent. The German Government, with that liberality and wisdom which may well put to shame the Government of India and its advisers, readily granted permission to Dr. Koch to continue his researches in India, where cholera is always more or less prevalent. At each of the post-mortem examinations made in Calcutta—thirty-five in number—the German doctors found the same bacterium which they had previously found in Egypt; but, although looked for with care and minuteness, neither diarrhoea nor dysentery cases yielded the bacillus. So far, then, the investigations in India tended only to confirm what the results of the experiment in Egypt had disclosed namely—the existence of a bacillus peculiar to cholera found regularly in the walls and contents of the intestines, and found in no other diseases, though searched by the same exact methods as those which yielded the first discovery. How to connect this bacillus with the subject suffering from cholera was an important point to establish. In other words, did the bacillus exist outside of subjects suffering from cholera? If so, considerable light would be thrown on the various ways in which cholera spread with such rapidity and with such deadly effect. Search was made in the river water, in the tanks, and in the wells of Calcutta, with no result until last week, when the efforts of Messrs. Koch, Fischer, and Gaffky were crowned with success. An outbreak of cholera was reported, sixteen cases in all, among the people living in the vicinity of a tank in Baliaghata. The water of this tank was examined and the bacterium found in abundance. A few days after, the water from the same tank was again examined, and, although it was still found, the numbers were much less than on the previous occasions. Of course, it is impossible to say, at this early stage of the investigation, what the causes are which retard, diminish, or accelerate the growth of the cholera germ; but the fact that it has been discovered in abundance in the water of a Calcutta tank, round which cholera had just manifested itself, can point only to one conclusion, which is, that the germs of the disease were received from the water of the tank which was used by the people for domestic purposes. It in no way diminishes the lustre of the discovery which Dr. Koch and his colleagues have just made in Calcutta, that it was previously well established that cholera could be communicated by water. The merit of their discovery rests on the fact that the very micro-organism which is invariably found present in all true cholera cases has been found by them in the water used by the people among whom the outbreak occurred. Very much, no doubt, yet remains to be accomplished, but the existence of the bacterium outside the bodies of men and animals, ready at any time to assert its influence and induce disease of the most virulent type, is a large step in advance of anything which has hitherto been accomplished.—Englishman.

AN EXHIBITION FOR BOMBAY.

THREE or four weeks ago we hinted that M. Joubert was anxious to follow up the Calcutta Exhibition by a similar Exhibition in Bombay. He has now addressed the Bombay Government on the subject with proposals more or less definite; and the Bombay Committee of the Calcutta International Exhibition are to consider these proposals next Tuesday. M. Joubert conducts his exhibitions on what he calls the "co-operative principle"—that is, exhibitors and visitors alike contribute to swell M. Joubert's returns. This, of course, is apt to render an "International Exhibition" a huge commercial show, at which arts and sciences are sacrificed to trades and manufactures. The risk is minimised; but the Exhibition loses much of its teaching power and much of its attractiveness. Of course, the national system, in which the profits as well as the benefits of the Exhibition would be shared among the general community, would be infinitely better. But the success of the Calcutta Exhibition has scarcely been so marked as to hold out any hope that the citizens of Bombay would care to undertake the responsibility of holding a great International Exhibition here at present. It is a question for the next year or two, at any rate, of M. Joubert's Exhibition or nothing, and faut de mieux his scheme is worth consideration. We give the points of it as briefly as possible. The Calcutta Exhibition will close on the 8th March. The majority of the British, Foreign, and Colonial exhibitors at Calcutta have, he says, professed their willingness to contribute to a Bombay Exhibition, provided the management is entrusted to M. Joubert. If this be true, we have the machinery as well as the engineer ready at hand, and that is, of course, a great point in his favour. M. Joubert is willing to undertake the organisation and management of an exhibition here provided "certain facilities" are given him by the Government, the Corporation, and the Chamber of Commerce. "These are," he adds, "details however, which M. Joubert will be prepared to enter into when it is decided that the Exhibition is to be held."

This is the very mistake that was made in Bengal, and the Bengal Government found that the discussion of details after a definite consent had been given was a rather costly proceeding. There is no reason why the Bombay Government should commit themselves to anything definite. If the Exhibition Committee and the Chamber of Commerce approve generally of M. Joubert's proposal, the Government might express their willingness to see M. Joubert personally. They could then adopt such precautions as Calcutta experience may have rendered necessary. No harm can come from discussing the question. It is a case of "Hobson's Choice," M. Joubert's Exhibition or nothing. We are not particularly anxious to have an Exhibition, and we can, therefore, make our own terms. It would bring a certain amount of money into the city, and the Government would probably feel justified in contributing towards the expenses of the buildings, &c., as was done in Bengal. But they should only do so on the condition that the money was amply recouped; that a careful check was kept over the receipts; and that a fair percentage of M. Joubert's profits was returned to the community by whom the Exhibition was supported. If, as he says, a majority of the present exhibitors are anxious to contribute, the more anxious portion of his work is over, and he can afford to make a liberal bid for the patronage of the Bombay Government. What we especially want in Bombay at the present moment is a good Museum, and most International Exhibitions have resulted in the establishment of a permanent institution. The Government could afford to be generous in a grant towards the building, if it were understood that the main building were to be a permanent structure, to be eventually stocked, as the Calcutta Museum is now being stocked, by contributions sent from the other provinces; and, unlike the Calcutta Museum, by a fair percentage of the gate-money. The Albert Museum is standing vacant at present. It might be made the nucleus of the proposed Exhibition. Some of the annexes might be permanent, and some temporary. M. Joubert has proved himself an exceedingly shrewd business man. He has much of his proposed Exhibition out and dried. He cannot possibly take it elsewhere in India. If we have Hobson's Choice, so has he. We can offer him great advantages if he will only extend his co-operative principle so as to include us in its benefits. We can decline to deal with him upon any other footing.

If on these terms we can get a new attraction for next season without paying too much for it, so much the better; and if we incur no responsibility, we need not be very critical as to whether it is an International Exhibition, as the term is used in Europe, or only a huge show of the Calcutta type. At present, beyond the unknown "details" to be settled hereafter, M. Joubert only asks for space in a position on which to erect buildings; for powers to issue official invitations to the various countries and colonies; and for reduced rates along the railway for the Calcutta show cases. He offers to come to Bombay at once, and suggests that the Exhibition should be opened early next November. Any businesslike proposals are worth consideration by a commercial community. The honour and glory of a real Bombay International Exhibition must be reserved for a later period, and in the meantime all experience will be useful. We have the gift of a valuable concession, and M. Joubert seems to have a practical scheme. There is no reason why we should not "trade." Mr. Mowat, the Chairman of the Bombay Committee, seems to be taking the initiative in bringing the scheme before the Bombay public. He may probably have something more to tell us next Tuesday, as he is understood to have discussed the subject with M. Joubert when he was over in Calcutta. We would venture to recommend him to invite the members of the Bombay Trades Association to attend the meeting. All sections of the community who are concerned in Exhibitions of this kind would then be present, and it would be easy for the Chairman to inform Government as to what the popular feeling upon the question really was.—Times of India.

THE EXTENSION OF RAILWAYS IN INDIA.

THE members of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce must not be cast down if they find that the task which they have set before themselves in convening a public meeting to memorialise the Government of India on the question of railway extension, is not accomplished without the expenditure of much energetic labour. In all Governments, however excellent the personnel individually may be, there is a vis inertia which is the accumulation of generations of official traditions, and for the existence of which no living man can be held responsible. It will be the duty, during the next few months, of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, and of other similar associations in Europe as well as in India, to make a strong effort to destroy that power which, in Matthew Arnold's phrase—"makes for" inaction. At the present stage of the history of the agitation, to the promotion of which the Bombay Chamber is wisely lending itself, it is not necessary to discuss the value of the specific propositions contained in the resolution passed on Monday, with reference to the amount of extra mileage which should be annually added to the railway system of this country. Neither would it be well, at the present moment, to encumber the debate which will certainly arise before the initial difficulties of the grand and absolutely necessary scheme are overcome, by insisting upon the acceptance of any arbitrarily fixed series of years as the period during which the proposed extensions shall be carried out.

The point in the Bombay memorial which, at this juncture, is specially deserving of attention, is the suggestion that the loan required for the accomplishment of the proposed work should be raised in London, in sterling, and on the guarantee of the Government of India. We need not even stop, at the stage in the argument which is implied by the action of the Bombay Chamber, to inquire whether or not the credit of the Government of India is sufficiently good to permit of a given number of millions sterling being borrowed on its guarantee, in the several financial centres of Europe, at the rate of 3½ per cent. in perpetuity. It is quite enough, for the purposes of the argument to assume—and every financier will, of course, admit the soundness of the assumption—that the guarantee of the Government will secure the advance of the capital required for the proposed railway extension for an amount which will mean a much smaller charge to the capital account than if the private promoters of a great Indian railway scheme went into the money markets of the world on their own account. And this is only one way of stating the self-evident truth that, in the working of the Indian railways of the future, the expenditure which, in order to satisfy the demands of the capital account, will have to be added to the annual charges for working the lines, will be very much reduced should the advisers of the Government on financial questions see their way to recommending the granting of the required guarantee. And, to pursue the argument one step further, the granting of such a guarantee will have the effect of anticipating the date at which, under less favourable financial conditions, the new lines will become soundly profitable commercial concerns.

If there were no other factors in the case to be taken into consideration, the Chambers of Commerce, whose views are represented, with sufficient general accuracy, by the Bombay meeting of Monday last, might reasonably anticipate an almost immediate assent, on the part of the Government of India, to the prayer of their memorial. For it must always be assumed, throughout the subsequent negotiations which take place in connection with this pre-eminently important question, that the Government has tacitly, if not explicitly, admitted that any new railway line made in India, under sufficiently trustworthy commercial and engineering advice, is morally certain to be a financial success at the end of a given series of years. But there is a clause in the Bombay memorial which points to the real or supposed difficulty by which the Financial Department of the Government of India finds itself surrounded even after—as it is fair to assume, having assented to the general principle that a series of railways constructed with the lowest outlay of capital which can be secured by the Government guarantee, would at the end of a limited term of years be re-productive to an extent which would under ordinary conditions much more than cover the risk of the guarantee. But the members of the Bombay Chamber, by their suggestion that the required loan should be raised in sterling, show that—as might have been expected from the commercial experience which has been gained by most of their number—they are perfectly familiar with the nature of the difficulties which prevent the Finance Department from at once formulating a scheme for the required guarantee. It need hardly be explained that—even with the increased knowledge which prevails on the European exchanges of the system of calculations by which the probable fluctuations in the value of the rupee can be reduced almost to a nicety—it would be a task of almost, if not altogether, insuperable difficulty, to float a great financial scheme in Europe, the leading feature of which should be the payment of the guaranteed interest in silver, and in Calcutta. At stage in the discussion it would be perfectly natural, and perfectly fair, on the part of the Government of India, to reply:—Why should we, one of whose duties it is, among many others, to maintain the finances of the country in an absolutely sound condition, enter into a speculation—by guaranteeing the interest of a loan in sterling—a speculation which might be declined by many operators in London, Paris, and Berlin? But it is not difficult to supply a perfectly satisfactory answer. The Indian Government is in possession of special information, with regard to the influence of the fall in the value of the rupee upon railway traffic, which would take ten years to convey to the minds of the great body of European investors. It is not desirable to spend those ten years in the process of educating a crowd of comparatively small capitalists in the rudimentary principles of Indian finance. These principles are thoroughly understood by the great financial operators of the leading houses of the world; and some of them would, no doubt, be very glad to take any risk arising out of the fall in the value of the rupee, provided that, on the other hand, they were permitted to avail themselves of the guarantee of the Indian Government, in order to enable them to raise the loan in the cheapest markets.

But there are obvious and weighty objections to the Government of India thus bartering its guarantee for the privilege of enjoying the not very heroic luxury of irresponsibility. And one of the reasons for the retention of the responsibility is that, when carefully examined, it will be found to be of the most infinitesimal nature. A fall in exchange would certainly mean an increase in the rupee remittances required to be sent home to provide for the interest on a sterling loan, and would thus, in a sense, apparently interfere with the accuracy of the figures in the estimates for an Indian budget. But the inaccuracy would be only apparent. For every student of commercial finance in this country knows very well that a fall in exchange causes an immediate increase of exports from India. That increased export not only tends to increased railway traffic, and therefore creates an additional amount of revenue to the Government which will balance its loss on account of the fall in the value of silver—it also attends to again strengthen the rate of exchange. The action and reaction of the two financially commercial influences is, in fact, so nearly like the working of a perfect balance, that the apprehensions of official financiers as to the possible destruction of budget estimates by fluctuations in the market value of the rupee have, as a matter of fact, in reference to railway operations only the most slender foundation.—Englishman.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

THE following memorial has been drawn up for presentation to the Viceroy by the zemindars and planters of Moosufferpore:—

"Most respectfully Sheweth,—That the Select Committee appointed by your Excellency to revise and report on the Bengal Tenancy Bill, and actually engaged in the duty since 21st November last, consists, as at present constituted, of ten members, and that all the members forming the committee, with the exception of three gentlemen, have, your memorialists are afraid, no practical knowledge and experience of zemindary matters.

"2. That your memorialists need scarcely point out that a practical knowledge and experience of zemindary affairs in all their manifold details and aspects, is indispensably necessary in gentlemen to whom the duty of solving grave and important questions connected with landed property in Bengal is entrusted, if it is the object of the Government to obtain such a solution of the several difficult and intricate questions involved as may be safely relied upon by all parties concerned as a safe guide for ascertaining the wants, grievances, and defects which actually now exist, and determining the least and the most appropriate measures for supplying the wants and remedying and removing the grievances and defects.

"3. That in consideration of the circumstances and facts set forth above, your memorialists have ventured to urge upon your Excellency the necessity and expediency of appointing on the Legislative Council of your Excellency some more additional members for the special purpose of assisting the Select Committee on the Bengal Tenancy Bill, carefully selecting only such gentlemen as may be best fitted for the duty by their thorough and sound practical knowledge and experience of zemindary affairs.

"4. That your memorialists further beg to suggest that it is highly desirable that the proceedings of the Select Committee should be made public, in order to give an opportunity to all parties interested in the several important matters which are now engaging the attention and consideration of the Committee to make their suggestions and comments, and that your memorialists beg therefore to solicit that your Excellency may be pleased to make the necessary orders for the early publication of proceedings of the said committee."

MR. MACDONNELL ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

Mr. MacDonnell, the Revenue Secretary to the Government of Bengal, as we have already stated, has become the chief factor in the present project of land legislation for Bengal. What Mr. MacKenzie was to the Government of Sir Ashley Eden, Mr. MacDonnell seems to be to the Government of Mr. Rivers Thompson. But there is a wide disparity between the two. Mr. MacKenzie with all his Radical ideas about the relations between the landlord and tenant in Bengal, never went to the length of denying that the zemindars were the proprietors of the soil, or asserting that the ryots were the proprietors of the land. His object was to give better security to the cultivators of the land and to protect them from arbitrary eviction. But Mr. MacDonnell's Radicalism is of a wholly destructive character; he would destroy every vestige of proprietary right in the zemindar. The reader is aware that the zemindars of Bengal and Behar have lately submitted a petition to the Secretary of State regarding the Bengal Tenancy Bill, in which they have pointed out that though the object of the Bill has been declared to restore the ancient land law of the country, its obvious tendency is to set at naught that law. According to rules of procedure this memorial was forwarded through the Government of India, and that Government before forwarding it called upon the Government of Bengal for an expression of opinion upon it, and the Lieutenant Governor in his turn called upon his Revenue Secretary, Mr. MacDonnell, to lend the light of his knowledge. Mr. MacDonnell has accordingly indicated a memorandum, a copy of which the Bengal Office has been good enough to forward to us for review. We have carefully perused it, and we can only say that if its author thinks that by persistent iteration of misread facts and opinions and misleading statements he can carry conviction, he is quite welcome to lay that flattering unction to his soul. How such a knowing and experienced Governor as Mr. Rivers Thompson has been taken in passes our understanding.

To clear the ground, we desire to give an emphatic contradiction to the statement that the present Bill "was at all events at the outset undertaken at their (zemindars') own repeated solicitations." None knows better than Mr. MacDonnell that the Bill which the zemindars had wanted was of a different nature altogether—that they had wanted a law to facilitate the settlement and realisation of rent, that they did not want a measure which would confiscate their rights and reduce them to mere annuitants. Knowing, as he must do, the difference between the present Bill and the prayer of the zemindars, we cannot understand with what consistency or decency he has repeated the calumnious charge against the zemindars. But let that pass.

We now come to Mr. MacDonnell's historical disquisition "on the relative position of the State, the zemindar and the ryot in pre-settlement times." The zemindars in their memorial to the Secretary of State quote Harrington, who says that "it was an established principle of Mogul finance as practised in Hindostan that the rents belong to the sovereign and the land to the zemindar." Mr. MacDonnell replies to this statement in the following style:

"To the antiquarian aspect of the question nevertheless, great prominence is given in this memorial, and a case is sought to be made out against the Government, by combining into an indictment fragments of history, ill-remembered, with fragments of law, ill-understood. Such erroneous representations must not be allowed to pass uncontradicted, however loath I may be to spend time on a discussion which I feel must be barren of practical good on this part of the subject. However, it will not be necessary to follow the memorialists at very great length. I am aware, that from the discussions which preceded the Permanent Settlement of 1793, passages may be cited to support the claim of absolute proprietary right for which the zemindars now contend; but as the discussions were not one-sided, it would be easy to add to the many passages of equal authority which, during the present controversy, have been adduced to establish the contrary position. That, however, would be a tedious course to adopt, and I therefore limit myself to pointing out very briefly the intrinsic weakness of the memorialists' case on this part of the argument. The first point which the memorialists seek to make is based upon a declaration, made by some native officials whom Mr. Shore consulted that 'the rents belong to the sovereign, and the land to the zemindars.' From these words the conclusion is drawn that the predecessors of the zemindars of to-day were owners of the land. That conclusion, however, is fallacious; for authorities maintain that by 'zemindars' in that context is meant the actual cultivators of the soil (arbab-i-zamin). 'The truth is,' says the famous Hanifah lawyer Abu Mahomed Sareksi (Shamus-ul-Aimma), 'that between the sovereign and the rubb-al-arz, who is properly the cultivator, no one intervenes who is not a servant of the sovereign.' When, again, the memorialists infer the zemindars' proprietary rights in the soil from the assertion that the Emperors of Delhi purchased from zemindars lands required for public purposes, I make the objection in the first place, that, on the very authority they quote, the fact of such purchases is uncertain; while, in the second place, granting the fact, the inference is not justifiable. 'A zemindar is a payer of revenue,' postulates the document on which the inference is based; and the true inference from that postulate is that, if zemindars were recompensed for lands acquired for forts or mosques, such recompense must be regarded not as compensation for the land itself, but for the zemindars' share of the revenue collections from that land."

So according to the Arabic erudition of Mr. MacDonnell the word zemindar under the fiscal system of the Mahomedans meant the actual cultivator of the soil. The zemindars, who were acknowledged by the British Government to be proprietors of the land, had no existence under Mahomedan rule. If this is the result of Mr. MacDonnell's reading of Mahomedan law and history, we congratulate him upon his success. A glance at Mr. Justice Field's learned work on Landholding would have given him a fair idea of the status of the zemindars in pre-settlement times. Mr. Field thus describes the Bengal zemindars:—

"The Bengal zemindars, as we found them, were the persons who collected the revenue from the cultivators and other subordinate landholders, and they were responsible for paying it when collected into the Government treasury. Their origin was various and their rights were by no means well defined. They were no doubt in many instances rajahs or chiefs, or persons otherwise possessed of local importance and influence, which the Mahomedan subahdars utilised for the collection of the revenue, and which were increased and extended by being thus recognised by the authority of Government and called into active exercise. Where no such persons existed, the want was supplied by appointing some of the numerous candidates who were ready to give a valuable consideration for a position which afforded great opportunities of profit. It had always been usual to exact a sum by way of fine or nazarana upon every accession to the position even in the case of the heirs of the zemindars of the former class, in whose family their rights had been hereditary before the existence of the Mogul power. Persons who had an undoubted right of succession found it expedient to comply with the demands of those who had it in their power to put their rights aside; while new men and the heirs of those whose sanads or parents were but a generation old, were very willing to pay for succeeding to a position to which they had no other title than the will of the ruler."

Now, we ask, does it appear from the above that the persons who held the rank of zemindars in pre-settlement times, meant actual cultivators of the soil?

A firman of the Emperor Aurungzebe in 1668 says:—"We have deemed it expedient to issue our royal edict to all officers entrusted with the management of affairs throughout Hindustan, directing them to levy the khiraj in the mode and proportion enjoined by the holy law and the tenets of Abu Haneefa." The khiraj, or State share of the produce of the land, was and is, by that "holy law," as much a legal due and right of the sirdar or Government as the residue, or the land itself, is undoubtedly the property of the khiraj-payer, the landowner, in every darul-Islam, i.e., Musalman-ruled country. It is evident, writes the well-known Arabic scholar and Mahomedan lawyer, Mr. Neil Edmonstone Ballie, "that the Mahomedan sovereign has no possible pretension to be considered the proprietor of ooshree or khiraj land. Khiraj, in particular, is due by a proprietor of land to the sovereign, as representative of the community, and the sovereign cannot be creditor and debtor at the same time."

Mr. Field, in his note to Chapter 21 of his book says:

"Mr. Shore in his minutes of April 2, 1788, and June 18, 1789, says that the origin of the proprietary and hereditary rights of the zemindars is uncertain; that in Akbar's time the zemindars were numerous, rich, and powerful, that they were not of his creation, and probably existed with some possible variation in their rights and privileges before the Mahomedan conquests in Hindustan, and without any formal acknowledgment acquired stability by prescription. He infers that the new invaders, who claimed the revenues of the country, from motives of policy and humanity, employed the ancient possessors of the land as their agents for the collection of the taxes of the State, superadding the jurisdiction exercised by the collectors of revenue in their own system of finance; and for this purpose, they confirmed the former proprietors by sanads, or grants conferring offices of an inheritable and permanent nature. He does not consider the sanad to be the foundation of the tenure. In Appendix No. 15 to Mr. Shore's Minute will be found an account of the origin and descent of the zemindars of Rajshahye, Dinajpore, Burdwan, Nadia, and Lushkerpur, showing that the zemindari descended in these families."

Again: Mr. Shore—"The constitution of the Mogul Empire, despotic in its principle, arbitrary, and irregular in its practice, renders it some times almost impossible to discriminate between powers and principle, fact and right; and if custom be appealed to, precedents in violation of it are produced."

Further, Mr. Shore's minute of April 2, 1788. I cord Cornwallis said in his minute of Feb. 3, 1790:—"the question that has been so much agitated in this country, whether the zemindars and talukdars are the actual proprietors of the soil, or only officers of Government, has always appeared to me to be very uninteresting to them; whilst their claim to a certain percentage upon the rents of their lands has been admitted, and the right of Government to fix those rents at its own discretion has never been denied or disputed." Another discussion was as to whether the Sovereign, the zemindars, or the raiyats were the owners of the land. As a matter of fact no one ever did or can own land in any country, that is in the sense of absolute ownership—such ownership as a man may have in movable property, as for example, in a cow or a sheep which may be stolen, killed, and eaten, or in a table or chair which may be broken up or burned at the pleasure of its owner. Land is immovable, indestructible. No man, however feloniously inclined, can run away with an acre of it.

We hope the above extracts will satisfy Mr. MacDonnell that the zemindars were not actual cultivators of the soil, nor mere collectors of revenue. If they were not absolute owners of the land, even English landlords according to high legal authorities are not so. So that the status of the zemindars as proprietors of land does not suffer from their not being technically absolute owners of land.

There is one important fact which we wish to bring to Mr. MacDonnell's mind. After the battle of Plassey when a treaty was concluded between Clive and Mir Jaffier the zemindari of 24-Pergunnahs was conferred upon the East India Company. We give the passage from Mr. Field's book: "By the treaty concluded with Mir Jaffier he agreed to grant to the Company the land within the Mahratta Ditch and six hundred yards without the ditch; also that the land lying to the south of Calcutta as far as Kalpi should be under the Zemindari of the company, who were to pay the revenue "in the same manner with other zemindars." The revenue of this Zemindari was fixed at Rs. 2,22,958; and, as it included twenty-four pergunnahs or local divisions, it gave its name to the district around Calcutta which is still known as the district of Twenty-four Pergunnahs. So the East India Company was required to pay in the revenue in the same manner as other zemindars. Was the Company an actual cultivator of land or a mere collector of revenue? We pause for a reply.—Hindoo Patriot."

THE MAHARAJAH OF DUMRAON ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

At the great meeting to protest against the Bengal Tenancy Bill, held at Bankipur on Feb. 17, the Chairman, the Maharajah of Dumraon, on rising said:—"The object of our meeting to-day is to take into consideration certain matters connected with the Bengal Tenancy Bill. The bill is one which seriously affects the whole agricultural interests of Bengal and Behar. Naturally, great anxiety and alarm prevail throughout the country as to its progress. It is now before a Select Committee; but although the landed interests in the country are vitally interested as to the modifications and changes which are being discussed in committee, the public have no access to its deliberations or proceedings. When a Bill has been passed in a Select Committee the amendments allowed are few. The members, however, while discussing the Bill in Select Committee, do not receive any extraneous aid, nor any light from outside. The present Government profess to be in favour of light and publicity in all matters; and the proceedings of the Select Committee may gain, and can by no means lose, by such publicity. It is the object of this meeting to adopt a resolution to apply to Government for the publication of the proceedings of the Select Committee. It is the same resolution as has been recently adopted by the Central Committee of Landholders of Bengal and Behar. In the name of the ryots and a large class of zemindars who are ignorant of the English language we also ask for translations of the proceedings. Whether the request will be granted remains to be seen, but its reasonableness, I hope, no one will deny. Then you have, for your consideration, certain letters of the Government of Bengal, and a memorandum. The reason why it has been thought proper to lay these matters before a general meeting is, that if an arrangement such as we object to is allowed to go unchallenged, it is thought to be one which does not admit of challenge or contradiction. But while allowing these matters to be laid before the general meeting, I would certainly deprecate those hard expressions. His Honour the Lieutenant Governor and those about him deserve our utmost regard; and though unfortunately in this matter their views are opposed to our interests, we cannot forget the respect that is always due from us to their exalted station. Gentlemen, we have so long cried out in our interest that it is time that we should raise our cry in the interests of the ryots as well. We may be misunderstood. We have been stigmatised as selfish when standing on our own rights. We may be told now that we say this and that out of interested motives; but for all that we need not forget our duty to the dumb millions who are entrusted to our charge. Now, gentlemen, will the present Bill benefit our ryots? I emphatically say no. Whom is the Bill calculated to benefit? I say only the class of middlemen. Act it did it, though not to a large extent, and the present Bill, if passed into law, is calculated to do it still more. To me it appears that the discussions in Select Committee lie in a nutshell. Who are the ryots, and how are our legislators to define them? The Bengal Tenancy Bill defines the ryot by a negative. It lays down that "a person shall not be deemed to be a ryot in respect of any land or to hold that land as a ryot, unless he holds it for purposes of agriculture, horticulture, pasture, or unless he or his predecessor in interest came into possession of it for such purpose." Now this negative definition brings within its wide range every class of men—middlemen, mahajuns, indigo planters, Government servants, thikadars—even the much maligned zemindars, excepting as provided by the section. For the benefit of that section gives a right of occupancy to the present owners or possessors of entire estates. For the benefit of this heterogeneous mass, who are not bond fide ryots (i.e. actual cultivators of the soil, and who, when let in will never cultivate lands themselves, the present agitation for a change of law is really going on. If the Bill is really understood in all its scope, it is for the benefit of this body, who only by way of irony can be described as weak and unresisting, that the three "F's" are to be conceded and you are to be deprived of the right of free contract. There are to be surveys and records of rights. To the tender mercies of these men, who are called by one of the ablest members of the Rent Commission the worst rack-renters, the whole body of actual cultivators are to be handed over. The present Bill has to face the weighty testimony of the same gentleman—a most experienced member of the Rent Commission. He says that the most rack-renting is to be found when the right of occupancy falls into the hands of Mahajuns, money-lenders, or other persons who do not cultivate themselves, but sublet to koria ryots, who are the actual cultivators. The definition of ryots, therefore, in the interests of those who are bond fide actual cultivators of the soil—that is, ryots properly so called—is the cardinal point of the Bill.

Why, in the interests of the ryots themselves, should not the definition be confined to the real body of bond fide cultivators of the soil? Subletting will not then pay; the unearned increment will not then go to middlemen and occupancy ryots; and the freedom of sale would then lose half its objectionable features. It will be necessary, from this point of view, to recast the whole Bill. But it will be surely more intelligible than it is now. Gentlemen, all of us have very often heard the report of the Famine Commission referred to in high places in support of the Bill. But one part of that report appears to be conveniently overlooked. It says on the question of subletting.—"This seems to us of even greater importance. The more valuable the occupancy right becomes by reason of such measures of protection as we have advocated, the more need there will be of guarding against a custom, which is everywhere prevalent in India, under which the privileged tenant is apt to turn into a middleman, subletting land and living on the difference between the rack-rent and the privileged rate secured him by law. The occupancy right can only be beneficial to the community when employed by a bond-fide cultivator, and the object of the law should be to prevent anyone who is not a bond fide cultivator from acquiring or retaining such rights. If this can be secured, the chief danger in the way of making such rights marketable will be removed, for they will not be able to pass into the hands of money-lenders, and if a tenant who becomes deeply involved is sold up, his land will pass to another tenant. The custom of subletting is not so generally prevalent as is assumed in the above extract, but I ask, are not all the provinces of the Bengal Tenancy Bill calculated to intensify the evil tenfold?" Further on the Famine Commission recommends:—"If a tenant for a long period fail to keep up the stock required for cultivating his land, or otherwise ceases to be, by occupation and habit, bond-fide a cultivator, the rights which he or his ancestor acquired by cultivating the soil might reasonably pass from him to a person who, having become an actual cultivator, occupies his place." How is this recommendation proposed to be carried out? By granting the power of subletting to all ryots around. It is argued that the ryots right has, by lapse of time and advancing prices, "become generally a thing of real value, and that the Legislature could not support a proposal which tends to confiscate or to limit it in an arbitrary, unconstitutional way." Well, gentlemen, if the Legislature cannot check an admitted evil, why should it meddle, and muddle and intensify the evil tenfold? Why should it, while it confiscates our rights, confer them on a class which, far from having any claim to them, are the worst enemies of the actual cultivators? Why should the occupancy rights, valuable as they are proposed to be made, be conferred on people who are not actual cultivators? How will the community benefit by the change? The actual ryot is unable to raise his voice. It may be that in some places he is being led away by designing men or unthinking friends. He has influential and powerful friends, both here and in England. No doubt their experience of the actual condition of agricultural interests in India is not certainly on a par with their benevolence. If they knew what our doctrinaire legislation is calculated to bring them to, they would all, with one voice, protest against the false policy which will hand the mover to the worst rack-renters in the world.

THE MEMORIAL TO WAGHORN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

SIR,—At last a movement is taking place to do justice to the memory of Thomas Waghorn, who by establishing the Overland Route, has a claim to the gratitude of his country.

The importance of connecting England with India by steam communication had for many years before Waghorn appeared on the scene, occupied the minds of men both in this country and in India. In 1825 Lieutenant Johnson of the Royal Navy, made the first steam voyage by the Cape of Good Hope from this country to Calcutta in the Enterprise, and occupied 113 days in the voyage. Five years later Commander Wilson, of the Indian Navy, navigated the Red Sea in the steamer Hugh Lindsay, occupying from Bombay to Suez twentyone days under steam. This steam communication between Bombay and Suez was considered so important a commencement of the communication across the Isthmus to Europe that the eminent and far-seeing statesmen who were at that time administering the affairs of our great eastern dependency did all in their power to further it and pressed its adoption on the authorities at home. Mr. Mountstuart Elphinstone when retiring from the Government of Bombay returned by the Red Sea and the Isthmus. His successor, Sir John Malcolm, ably supported by the co-operation of his brothers, Sir Charles and Sir Pulteney, one commanding the Indian Navy and the other the British Fleet in the Mediterranean, went in the Hugh Lindsay from Bombay to Suez, and was met on the other side of the Isthmus by a steamer which conveyed him to Europe, and Lord William Bentinck, the economical Governor General of India, asserted when he returned to England that steam communication by the Isthmus would be cheaply bought at any price. M. de Lesseps the other day bore striking testimony to the early advocacy, not only for the communication by this route, but for the construction of a canal across the Isthmus by General Chesney, the distinguished explorer of the too long-delayed highway by the Euphrates Valley. Notwithstanding many minds being directed to the establishment of the Overland Route, it was reserved for Lieutenant Waghorn to be not only the pioneer, but the founder, of the route, for; in connection with steamers on the Red Sea and steamers on the Mediterranean, he erected stations and made other arrangements for forwarding passengers and mails from Alexandria to Suez. The success achieved by the exertions of Lieutenant Waghorn paved the way for the work of the great Frenchman, and led to the construction of the maritime canal connecting the Mediterranean and Red Sea, thus throwing open the portals of the East to the commerce and civilisation of the West, and promoting in a powerful degree the approximation of the great human family. The invention of printing, the discovery of the mariner's compass, even the discovery of the power of steam itself did not more nearly affect the happiness of mankind than the facilities of intercourse thus afforded, bringing distant nations, as it were, face to face. Those who advocate great designs of public importance must expect to meet rebuffs from stupidity and timidity, and of these Waghorn had his full share; but in 1837 Sir John Hobhouse bore testimony before a Parliamentary Committee of the House of Commons to the worth of Waghorn's labours, and he was employed by Government to forward the mails from Alexandria to Suez.

In 1834, through the energy and heroic perseverance of Thomas Waghorn, the route through Egypt, better known as the Overland Route, was adopted for the carriage of letters, thereby shortening the passage to India by at least half the time occupied by a Cape voyage. This mail service by the Isthmus was conducted between Suez and India by steam vessels of the Indian Navy until the year 1840, when the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company contracted with the Government of India to carry it on; and from that time until 1869, when M. de Lesseps's great work of cutting through the Isthmus was completed, this company, with the Messageries Maritimes, enjoyed a virtual monopoly of the most valuable part of the Indian Trade. Immediately, however, upon the Suez Canal becoming a fait accompli, the enterprise of British shipowners was brought into full play, and large and powerful steamers were constructed for the new route. Steam vessels now run regularly from London, Liverpool, Glasgow, Hull and Southampton, to Kurrachee, Bombay, Madras, and Calcutta. Round the coast of India and Ceylon, to Burmah, the Straits Settlements, China, Australia, Java, in the Persian Gulf, and Red Sea, and on the east coast of Africa there are lines of steamers under the British flag trading regularly from the principal ports of India. As recently as 1857, on the outbreak of the Sepoy war, the Government of India were in extremity for steamers to bring troops from Mauritius, Ceylon, and China to the assistance of their hard-pressed and greatly outnumbered forces. At the present time it would be easy for that Government to have promptly available, chiefly by means of the Suez Canal, 80,000 to 100,000 tons of steam-shipping for such a purpose. An additional security for the safety of the Empire is thus afforded, the value of which it would be difficult to estimate.

During the first Burmese war Waghorn greatly distinguished himself by his personal bravery and conduct, and established for himself in those remote regions a monument for all time by hoisting a twelve pounder from the deck of his vessel on to a hitherto inaccessible rock 220 feet high, at the mouth of the Aracan River, which now serves as a landmark for ships entering the river, and is still known to East Indian commanders by the name, "Waghorn's Rock," and yet this man who has so well deserved of his country has been allowed to die, not only unrewarded, but without his eminently successful labours being even recognised by Government or by his countrymen. A movement is now being made to make some amends, however tardy, by erecting a monument to his memory, and to make some provision for the modest wants of his aged sisters. Having these objects in view, a committee has been appointed, under the auspices of the Lord Mayor, composed of gentlemen well acquainted with the labours of Waghorn, and capable of appreciating the value of those labours as affecting the commercial and other relations of this country with its distant dependencies.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,
W. P. ANDREW.

Army Schoolmistress J. L. Pope, Madras Army, has been placed on the Unemployed List.

Major E. Austin, Madras Staff Corps, has been allowed to continue to officiate as deputy adjutant general for musketry 2nd Circle, on completion of tour, until further orders.

Quietly, and, it might almost be said, leisurely, the defences of the River Hooghly, to protect the approaches to Calcutta, are being completed. On the 29th of January last a detachment of the 3rd Battery, 1st Brigade Scottish, at present stationed in Fort William, left under command of Major T. P. Price for Patna, to mount the armament of the new fort erected there. This armament consists of 9-inch, 12-ton, R.M.L. guns, which, though perhaps of not the most approved modern type, should, with the assistance of the torpedoes in the river, be able to stop the progress of any vessel. The work of mounting the guns varied with, perhaps, some of the first-rate snipeshooting to be got in the neighbourhood, occupied the officers and men of the battery till the 16th of February, when they returned to Calcutta.

Furlough has been sanctioned for the Bengal Native Army from the 15th March to 15th October next, to the extent of fifteen per cent. of the effective strength of corps.

The Government of India have sanctioned the transfer of the head-quarters of the Deputy Commissary-General, Central Circle, from Lucknow to Meerut.

The Austrian gunboat Albatros, Captain Josef Wottry, arrived in Bombay on Sunday. She carries two heavy guns and a small gun. She will stay for eight days, and will then proceed to Point de Galle.

Colonel Castle, now of the Duke of Wellington's Regiment at Nowshera, will complete his tenure of command of a battalion (five years) on the 23rd of July next; consequently he will be placed on half-pay from that date. His intention, it is believed, is to leave India in May; the command of the 1st Battalion (the old 33rd) will fall to Lieutenant Colonel Bally who, with the exception of six months, has passed all his service in that regiment. Major Fenn will obtain the vacant Lieutenant colonelcy.

Just before leaving India the 10th Hussars received a well-timed and flattering compliment in the shape of a very handsome cup of Indian workmanship, presented to Colonel Wood, and the officers of the regiment in the name of the officers of the Bengal and Punjab Cavalry and Central India Horse as a memento of the good fellowship which had ever existed, and of the kindly feelings evoked as well by service together in the field as by friendly rivalry and contention in various sports and games. Colonel Wood, in a letter acknowledging the acceptance of the cup, wrote: "The trophy will recall to all those who have served with the regiment in India the pleasant reminiscences of bygone days. To their successors it will be one of the most valued testimonials of honour to the regiment."

A circular has been issued by the Controller of Military Accounts, Bengal, informing commanding officers of native regiments that cases of native officers and men invalided on account of disorders brought on themselves should be accompanied by a recommendation as to the amount of pension which should be granted, together with a statement of the field services and general character of the individual.

The 2nd Battalion Cheshire Regiment moved from Peshawar on the arrival of the 2nd Battalion Dorsetshire Regiment, on the 25th February, en route to Umballa.

The Examiner of Marine Accounts, Calcutta, Mr. C. E. Palmer, is about to go on ninety days' privilege leave to England.

The Examiner of the Pay Department, Madras, and the Examiner of the Commissariat Accounts, Bombay, also intend going home soon on privilege leave for ninety days.

It was expected Colonel Hands, the present Judge Advocate-general, Madras Army, would have availed himself of two years' furlough to Europe, preparatory to obtaining his off-reckonings on attaining to colonel's allowance. It was definitely settled that Major Hallett, the Deputy Judge Advocate, Secunderabad Circle, would then have succeeded as the next Judge Advocate General, the vacancy thereby created being filled by Lieut. Col. Shaw, the Officiating Deputy Judge Advocate at the Presidency. These contemplated arrangements have now fallen to the ground, as Col. Hands purposes fulfilling his tenure of appointment, which expires in March, 1886, by which time he will also be entitled to colonel's allowance. Lieutenant Colonel Shaw will continue to officiate at the Presidency, pending Major Skinner's return from furlough, which expires at the end of June next. It is said that Major Chaplin, the deputy judge advocate at British Burmah, contemplates availing himself of furlough to Europe when Major Skinner returns; this will necessitate Lieutenant Colonel Shaw again performing officiating duty as Judge Advocate in Burmah during Major Chaplin's absence.

The 2nd Battalion "The Queen's" will leave Umballa on Feb. 25, by march route, for Sabathu, which it is expected to reach on the 1st proximo, and will remain for the hot season.

The Governor General in Council has been pleased to sanction the formation of a mounted company of rifles, to be designated "The No. 1 Mounted Rifle Company," in the Lucknow Volunteer Rifle Corps, and has directed the Ordnance Department to supply cavalry carbines, with buckets, Mackenzie slings, and waist and pouch belts, for the use of the company.

Major J. B. Slater, Wing Commander, 2nd (or Hill) Sikh Infantry is about to retire from the service.

The following are the orders for the brigade parade this morning:—"Attack and defence of a position—Attacking force (under the command of Col. Beville, 21st N. I.):—3 guns; R. A.; 10th Regt. N. I.; and 21st Regt. N. I. Defending force (under the command of Col. Hallows, East Yorkshire Regt.):—3 guns, R. A.; East Yorkshire Regt. The strength and position of the enemy having been ascertained by a reconnaissance in force last Wednesday, it is determined, if possible, to force the position taken up by the defending force. The out posts of the defending force to be limited to the line of Church-gate-street until a time, gun is fired at 5.30, when patrols may be pushed forward, but not before that time. The limits of the operations as before, except that on the south side will be a line drawn from the Wodehouse Bridge along the north side of the Tramway Company's stables to the tramway on the Colaba-road. Umpires in blue, with white bands on left arm: Brigadier General Col. Smart, Major Dundas, Capt. Dean-Pitt, Capt. Challoner, and Lieut. Swann. Ammunition, 20 rounds per rifle, 10 rounds per gun. Dress—Khakee.

It is contemplated to hold a short camp of exercise for the Bombay Volunteers from the 18th to 22nd March. It is the hope of the Commandant and all officers of the corps that those who have not yet made themselves efficient in drill will take this opportunity of doing so. There will be drill on both the mornings and evenings of the 18th, 19th, and 20th—six drills in all—and thus in three days a work may be accomplished which in far too many cases it has taken four months not to do. Breakfast will be provided immediately after morning parade, and dinner in the evenings, for those who attend the parade.

If the camp proves the success that it is hoped it will, amusements will be provided after dinner. As camp equipage and comfortable tents will be pitched in front of the Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy School of Art, it is further hoped that many will sleep in the tents, so as to be on parade at six in the morning. This is the first time that such a camp has been held in Bombay, and it is therefore a novelty which it is hoped may have the effect of rousing up the corps from its present somewhat lethargic existence. The police will most probably do the guard duties by day and night.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MARCH 18, 1884.

THE INDIAN CONSTITUTIONAL ASSOCIATION

We learn by telegram that the first public meeting of the Indian Constitutional Association was held in Calcutta on Saturday; and its immense success, and the spirit and vigour with which the Association has been inaugurated, may be gauged by the simple but striking fact that no less a sum than forty thousand rupees was subscribed on the spot.

We look on this constitutional movement, started in the capital of British India, and destined to extend to every part of the Empire, as one of the most important political events that have occurred in that country for many years past—and one that promises the most far-reaching and beneficent results. Born of the necessities and the troubles created by the sentimental and sensational legislative projects of the last year or two, we believe it is likely to prove the most enduring and the most valuable outcome of Lord Ripon's "breathless benevolence." It has, we think, long been evident to the most thoughtful and the most disinterested well-wishers of India, that a terrible danger to the future of that country is ever present in the fact that its destinies are liable to be controlled and directed by the despotic will of a small clique of reckless visionaries. Whatever may be thought of the merits of that buried abortion, the Ilbert Bill, No. I.—and we would be the last to exhume the pernicious controversy on that subject—its fate (as has been pointed out by most of the ablest advocates on both sides) is an amply sufficient indication of the unwisdom that dictated the manner of its introduction. And now, as we look back on the wanton and gratuitous mischief caused by the recklessness of that manner, and as we look forward with dread to the social chaos threatened by such revolutionary proposals as those of the Bengal Tenancy Bill, there are many who will be inclined to agree with Lord Stanley of Alderley, that the "Ilbert Bill, No. I." was only a little bit of Machiavellian tactics, merely preparatory to the delivery of the central "attack in force" of our Radical regenerators. However this may be, the establishment of the Indian Constitutional Association may be regarded as conclusive proof that the Machiavellian tactics, if they were intended to divide the forces of the Constitution in India, have signally failed to effect their purpose: Anglo-Indian zemindars, planters, and merchants, have far too great a stake and too deep an interest in the welfare of the country, to be permanently dissociated from those doughty champions of order and property, the Maharajas, Rajas, and other notables of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa; and in the new Association we are delighted to hail the union of these two powerful and resolute bodies in the same determined resistance to a policy of revolution and confiscation.

We believe that much of the ill success that has hitherto attended the efforts of the friends of India, here at home, to arouse any intelligent interest in the affairs of that country, is due to the undoubted fact, as unaccountable as melancholy, that the attempt has been largely left in the hands of men who may be described (we use the words in no unkindly spirit) as the Radical Ishmaelites of Anglo-Indian society. The visionary character of the tirades of these sentimental gentlemen has been so obvious to sturdy British common-sense, and so repulsive to that British patriotism which after all is passionately proud of its Indian connection, that few have been willing to listen a second time to platitudes which are wearisome, when they are not irritating. We trust that one of the results of the new Association, and of the political movement that has produced it, will be to alter this—and to bring home to retired Anglo-Indians of culture and reputation the reproach they incur, and the political danger they permit to threaten the Indian Empire, when they allow Indian interests in England to be mainly represented by doctrinaires and crocheteers.

THE BUDGET:

SIR Auckland Colvin may fairly be consoled with on the hard fate which has saddled him with the responsibility for a Budget, over the preparation of which he has practically had no control whatever. In a year of profound peace, good harvests, and general prosperity—the very type of one of those years of plenty symbolised by Pharaoh's fat kine—the Government of India has just contrived to make both ends meet by stopping railway construction! We are told that it is all the fault of the bad opium crop—but no explanation is offered (at least in the telegraphed summary) as to how the opium reserves had been so depleted as to make the short crop so severely felt: The public is further assured that the statement made last year about the monstrous extravagance of Lord Ripon's Government is inaccurate. As we do not wish to be suspected of misrepresenting the Government of India, we will quote the very words of the Reuter's telegram in which this interesting and trustworthy intelligence is conveyed—we all know that Lord Ripon's views are always represented at their very best when they come to us through the medium of a Reuter's telegram. This is what the telegram says:—

"Finally, the minute enters at some length into an examination of the accuracy of the statement made last year regarding the increase of expenditure in India, and points out that the causes which led to such an increase were not of a nature to lead to charges of extravagance, being either largely covered by increased receipts in the departments in which the expenditure took place, or being due to the expenditure by provincial Governments of large balances which had accumulated during the Afghan war and of which at the time the provincial Governments could not avail themselves, or, finally, to misapprehension on the part of those by whom the complaints of extravagance have been brought."

We suppose that this very lucid explanation of the "causes which led to such an increase" in the expenditure of India under Lord Ripon's management is very satisfactory to the party of "Peace, Retrenchment, and Reform." The Radical monopoly of these articles is just now being admirably illustrated in the Soudan in much the same way. Osman Digna, with a reward of five thousand dollars on his head, alive or dead, is in a position to admire Radical notions on the subject of peace; whilst Zebehr Pasha and the Mahdi between them will introduce any number of Radical Reforms into that latest of Radical institutions, negro slave-driving. So in Lord Ripon's Budget; the "causes which led to such an increase" of expenditure, as Sir Auckland Colvin has to deplore, must clearly be largely due "to misapprehension on the part of those by whom the complaints of extravagance have been brought." Of course it must; obviously. It cannot be due to any extravagance of the Viceroy of the Party of Righteousness—the Apostle of Peace, Retrenchment, and all the rest of it.

THE NATIONAL INDIAN ASSOCIATION.

The meeting of the National Indian Association, to which we drew attention in our last issue, duly took place at Exeter Hall on Monday afternoon.

When we mention that the objects are very extensive and the funds very small; when we further state that the income for the last year was £503, and that out of this sum £303 was expended in printing the journal and report, we not only indicate that the scale of operations can scarcely be called less than insignificant, but that the management is certainly open to some exception.

Still, quite apart from these facts, we most willingly allow that the design of the Association is in every way estimable, and that it certainly demands both more serious notice and more cordial support.

The meeting, held in the convenient council chamber of Exeter Hall, was fairly attended, and was presided over by Sir Arthur Hobhouse, with his usual amiability. Some allusion was made to the political events, which, during the present Viceroyalty, had in a measure interrupted the good feeling previously prevailing between Englishmen and natives. But as politics were foreign to the objects of the occasion, the topic was lightly touched, and led only to an expression of hope, in which all could join, that a better state of things might soon prevail. Sir Alexander Arbuthnot lamented that more interest was not felt in the Association by the general public; and, indeed, that a certain apathy everywhere prevailed on the subject of India, but a retrospect of what had already been done for that country—which he followed out in some detail—might well lead us to regard the future with confidence.

Mr. Bryce, M.P., who spoke with force and neatness, expressed the belief that persons occasionally received Indian topics in silence, not from indifference to their purport, but from fear of exhibiting misapprehension. He, personally, had taken great interest in female education in England, and when he considered the immense strides made in the last twenty years, he naturally looked with deep sympathy on the efforts to introduce the benefits of knowledge into the zenanas of the East. After some sensible remarks from Mr. Bhowranuggar, Sir Lepel Griffin ascended the platform, and in those suave accents in which he is not averse to announce home truths, remarked that though the association carried with it his best wishes, yet his experience in India led him to think that its objects met with lukewarm support from the rich and noble amongst the natives themselves. He deprecated the tendency of educate students to devote themselves to politics, which were after all for them a barren pursuit; and expressed a desire to see a greater determination on the part of the cultivated to devote their knowledge to the removal of social degradation.

Ahmed Ali and Sir John Phear followed, and the call was then made for Dr. Leitner. Time did not allow him to do more than earnestly insist upon what are well known to be his views; namely—that improvement should proceed, as far as possible, upon indigenous lines. He thought the attainments of women in the East were often underrated, and that in dealing with female education, we should be careful not to ignore what they had already done for themselves, and should endeavour to make that the basis for further advancement.

A native medical gentleman from the Punjab gave a very hearty testimony to the kindness with which he had been received in England, and the meeting concluded with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

We observed amongst the company assembled, Miss Manning, to whom more than one speaker had alluded in terms of eulogy, Colonel Keatinge, Colonel Macdonald, Messrs. Boulnois, Lindsay, Spankie, Sherer, Sinnett, Foggo, and many others.

It appears to us that the two principal objects which the association should follow are that of giving advice and introductions to Indian students visiting London, and that of supporting the cause of zenana medical and educational work. In the present state of the finances, the Journal is clearly too great an expense, and runs away with sums which might be laid out to better purpose.

But in that the society has for its aim the drawing together, in closer bonds, the two races most interested in India, we do not see how well-wishers of the country can do otherwise than bid Miss Manning and her coadjutors, God speed.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

THE RUSSIANS AT MERV.

THE apathy which, according to the telegram from London which we publish this morning, appears to exist in England with regard to the accomplishment of the annexation of Merv, is, on the face of it, somewhat surprising. It is the more so on account of the contrast which would seem to be offered by the excitement which, we are told, is present in Germany and Austria on account of the latest Russian advance into Central Asia. It would be easy to explain the lethargic attitude of English politicians, in the presence of this most notable event by attributing it to the deadening influences which the rule of the present Government has exercised upon the whole world of foreign politics in London. The people who are told that the chief duty of the English administration is to increase the number of persons who are entitled to put ballot tickets into boxes are not likely to feel much interest in the possible future of places with whose names they are scarcely familiar, and of whose political importance to the future of Asia they know nothing.

It would not be just, however, to suggest that the apathy which seems to be exhibited by the best informed classes in the mother country with reference to the Merv annexation is altogether a consequence of the studied indifference with which questions of foreign politics are treated by Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues. The truth is that those who are most familiar with the situation in Afghanistan have, during the last three years, been sadly and reluctantly forced to the conclusion that the position of Merv is no longer of the importance which it held in 1880. During the period which has elapsed since that date, the ever-restless spirit of Muscovite aggression has found for itself a new road into Afghanistan. The key of India is no longer to be found on the route of which Merv forms one of the stages. It is not now, as it was some three years ago, an object of primary importance to the politicians who make Central Asia a matter of special study, to estimate the amount of material strength which would enable a Russian force to utilise Merv as a means of obtaining possession of Herat. While English statesmen—under the chilling influence of the Foreign Office, which at present discourages the study of any subject involving geographical knowledge extending beyond the Straits of Dover—have consistently pursued a policy of laissez-faire, the Russian soldier-diplomatist has been quietly working his way towards the confines of Afghanistan, with the shores of the Caspian Sea as the basis of his operation. When the flag of the Czar was hoisted at Askabad, the political importance of Merv ceased to exist. It is not wonderful, therefore, that the news of the latest Russian annexation should have been received in London with an apathy which could not be explained but for the fact that Merv has ceased to be one of the leading factors in the Central Asian question. To those—and their numbers include the best informed of Anglo-Indian statesmen—who believe that the active presence of Russia in Afghanistan means the creation of a standing menace to English rule in India, nothing can be more melancholy than the indifference with which the latest item of news from Central Asia has been accepted. That indifference, properly interpreted, means that while those who ought to have been the guardians of British prestige in the East have been dreaming away their days in devising schemes for suddenly converting the lowest classes of the English population into political dictators, an opportunity which was given to us of creating a solid barrier between Russian aggression and the British dominions in India has been thrown away. Had the Government which succeeded to that of Lord Beaconsfield been sufficiently courageous to act on the convictions which must have been present in the minds of its best informed members, and had that Government, acting in accordance with those convictions, retained Candahar, it would have been a matter of almost utter indifference to us whether Russia seized upon Merv or established herself at Askabad. As it is, the opportunity has gone for ever. It is not even now a case of shutting the stable door after the steed has been stolen. The steed is gone, and there is no possibility of securing the stable against further raids, because the robber has been able to open the gateway at the back of the premises which renders the shutting of the door at the front utterly useless as a preventive of pillage.—Englishman.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

THIS is perhaps formidable news for the present Government of India. It is reported that the cause of the Bengal Zemindars has been taken up in right earnest by the Hon. Mr Stanhope, and that, accordingly, the hon. gentleman has presented a petition to the House of Commons on behalf of the zemindars, bitterly complaining of the Bengal Tenancy Bill as an attempt to disturb without right or reason the established and customary relations between the landlords and tenants of the Province. It is also stated that many Conservative and Liberal members of Parliament have promised to support the petition in the House, and altogether the chances of the Bill being succeeded with by the Government of India despite all agitation seem to be seriously threatened. The opposition to the Bill is strong enough, but the Government are not likely to give way without passing the Bill in some form or another. The complaint of the zemindars that the measure is of a revolutionary character is met by the apologists for the measure by the plea that so far from attempting anything new, it recognises rights already existing but not sufficiently recognised, because not invested with legal form. It is worthy of note that while the zemindars are protesting with all their energies against the measure, the officials announce that the province is anxious that it should pass into law at once. The Revenue Secretary of the Government of Bengal, Mr. MacDonnell, has, it is said, drawn up what is considered a very able memorandum, defending the measure and demanding its early passage into law on the ground that "the entire Province is expectant, and there is even already the danger of a no-rent cry being raised in certain districts." This looks like suggesting what the ryots ought to do rather than stating what they are likely to do. It is undeniable that the Permanent Settlement of Bengal is an eyesore to many, and Mr. MacDonnell's recommendation ought to be looked upon as emanating from one who bears a strong, if not the strongest, prejudice against the zemindars. That the Bill ought to be carefully proceeded with no one would deny, now that the agitation on both sides is assuming serious importance.—The Indu Prakash.

A RIDE TO KHIVA.

BY CAPTAIN FRED BURNABY,
Royal Horse Guards.

Says page 13:—"Two pairs of boots lined with fur were also taken; and for physic—with which it is as well to be supplied when travelling in out-of-the-way places—some quinine and Coddie's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used ten times the natives of Central Asia with the greatest possible success. In fact, the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him five were made from my memory; and a friend of mine, who passed through the same district many months afterwards, informed me that my fame as a medicine man had not died out, but that the marvellous cure was even then the subject of conversation in the bazaar."

THE FRENCH IN TONQUIN SEEKING TO WIN AN EMPIRE IN THE EAST.

By the Author of "Our Burmese Wars and Relations with Burma," "Ashé Pyee," &c.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"The present volume gathers up many significant points of description, of politics, of commerce—which, in view of the manifest bearing that recent (and present) events in Tonquin have upon Burma and Indo-China generally, and our direct and indirect relations therewith, are of very timely utility. Perhaps, in one sense, no better short account of Burma and the Burmese at present exists."
Homeward Mail.

"The Author of 'Ashé Pyee' once more urges British statesmen to be watchful concerning everything that happens in and adjacent to Burma. . . . The subject is very carefully and thoughtfully dealt with."

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India, on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect, with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterized by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence not less than of justice to give these grievances all their constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is especially desirable to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does millions of our fellow-subjects.

JAPAN: TRAVELS AND RESEARCHES

Prussian Government.
By Prof. J. J. REIN,
Of The University of Marburg.The Times.—"Dr. Rein is an accomplished geographer, and is evidently, besides, a scholar of trained powers and untiring industry. The whole work is compiled on a carefully considered plan, and much of it is really interesting reading. As a compendious reference book it is at present without a rival."Daily News.—"It is the best of the many publications upon the subject that have appeared in the last ten years."
of the whole field of Japanese civilisation, and of the country itself."Sheffield Independent.—"The reader will be amazed at the immense and accurate amount of knowledge he has brought to the accomplishment of his task. The Japanese Government assisted him in the promotion of his undertaking.
This remarkable book deserves very careful study, which it makes easy by its splendidly executed maps and phototypes

FIFTY-SEVEN.SOME ACCOUNT OF THE ADMINISTRATION OF INDIAN DISTRICTS^S
DURING THE REVOLT OF THE BENGAL ARMY.

By

HENRY GEORGE KEENE, C.I.E., M.R.A.S., Author of "The Fall of the Mughal Empire," &c."The author breaks new ground. He essays to inform us how the different districts in the North West were preserved from anarchy by their civil administrators during such a stupendous catastrophe as the revolt of the army, upon whose support social order, in a great measure, rested. The task involves stories of adventure and plots, which never come amiss to the many readers who have relatives serving abroad; and these stories are given in picturesque language, with a conciseness precluding tedium, and in a tone throughout of the modesty which seems natural where duty is considered the first obligation, and courage the first attribute, of an English gentleman."—World."Mr. Keene tells how the civil officers in the districts kept or restored order, largely by their own individual influence, often by heroic exertion, and almost invariably with the loyal aid of native subordinates. He describes the events which occurred in some eight or nine districts of the North West Provinces and Bengal. His narrative is ap-proportioned in style, but it clearly shows that courage, firmness, heroism, and self-sacrifice were displayed among the members of the Indian Civil Service, as well as by the soldiers who stormed Delhi, relieved Lucknow, and avenged the crimes of Cawnpore."—Scotsman."This work claims our hearty recognition of its thoroughness. It gives us a most readable and trustworthy account of the reports of eye-witnesses, always the most valuable to the student of history. It has a special interest from the fact that Mr. Keene was himself one of those district officers who honourably held their ground during those fearful exciting times."—Literary World."Mr. Keene writes to give somewhat tardy honour where it is due—viz., to the civilian officers who, during the period of the Indian Mutiny, remained at their posts, and in many instances deprived of military aid, had themselves to raise and command levies for the protection of the district.""A volume which seems to us to break new ground, and to supply a want felt by those who have ever endeavored to study the subject. The matter is, for the most part, new, and it treats of incidents in themselves fairly entitled to attention, and calculated to excite interest. . . . The fights, the tides, and the surprises, and the escapes are all related in picturesque language."—Home News.

PERSONAL REMINISCENCES OF GENERAL
SKOBELEFF.

By

V. I. WEMIROVITCH-DAUTCHENKO.

TRANSLATED FROM THE RUSSIAN

By

E. A. BRAYLEY HODGETTS.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

St. James's Gazette.—"The new Biography of Skobelev is . . . deeply interesting, and the translator has done well to make it known to the English public."

Contemporary Review.—"It is most interesting, as well as . . . instructive throughout."

Graphic.—"The subject is of abounding interest. . . Mr. Brayley Hodgetts deserves hearty thanks for bringing such a life so clearly before the public."

Academy.—"The account of the third battle of Plevna . . . is one of the most stirring pieces of military journalism that we have ever read."

Public Opinion.—"Such will suffice to give us an idea of the 'Reminiscences' of the man who knew no fear, who passed as by a miracle through every danger, and who, had he lived, might have become the greatest soldier of our age. . . The work is, in every respect, thoroughly well got up. . . Too much praise cannot be given to Mr. E. A. Brayley Hodgetts for the able manner in which he has translated the work into English, and who has succeeded in making it so interesting and readable."

Whitehall Review.—"The Author's peculiarly happy anecdotal style of narration accords perfectly with the eventful career of Skobelev, his brilliant exploits, and his versatile genius."

Spectator.—"The writer correctly estimates his work as . . . 'merely a collection of fragmentary reminiscences.' From these fragments, however, it is easy to see that Skobelev was a real hero of the knight-errant, a fairy-prince kind."

Liverpool Mercury.—"A very remarkably entertaining book has been issued by Messrs. W. H. Allen of Waterloo-place, called 'Personal Reminiscences of General Skobelev.' . . . The author is a romancer."

Scotsman.—"The admiration verging on idolatry with which Russians regard the memory of General Skobelev is forcibly illustrated in this volume. . . Very skilfully translated by E. A. Brayley Hodgetts."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MARCH 25, 1884.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, March 7; Madras and Allahabad, March 5; Calcutta, March 4.

It is in vain that Sir Richard Garth, Chief Justice of Bengal, has denounced in a powerful minute the monstrous taxation of justice which is imposed by our exorbitant scales of court fees. The present Government of India is far too extravagant, and therefore too impecunious, for any reform of this kind.

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Times justly complains of the disturbing effect on business transactions, of Lord Ripon's obstinate reticence as to whether the Public Works Loan is to be raised in England or in India. Every one is confident that it must be raised in England; and yet no one can venture to base his business arrangements on that confidence, merely because Lord Ripon is afraid to force the hand of the Cabinet at home—and the Cabinet at home, as usual cannot agree on the point.

WE entirely agree with the Times correspondent, that the great and growing interest evinced by the Native Press on the subject of railway extension, is a remarkable and hopeful fact. It is greatly to be regretted, in every way, that Lord Ripon's lavish expenditure on objects of less solid utility forces the Government of India to have recourse to a Parliamentary inquiry, in order to give the finances breathing-time before carrying out the urgent needs of the country in this direction.

WITH an administrator of the calibre of Mr. Hope at headquarters, a man whose ability and judgment are trusted equally by Natives and by Europeans, Lord Ripon was favoured by Fortune with a grand opportunity; but, as usual, he has missed it.

AND now we have a Select Committee sitting on Indian Railways, with Mr. Baxter for their chairman! Mr. Baxter has visited India, with the object of inciting the Natives to attack the system under which the Indian Government has been accustomed to allot a small sum yearly for the provision of ministrations to the spiritual needs of its servants. Fortunately, the more liberal-minded of the Native community were quite aware that it would be no gain in the end to India, if this small sum were saved at the cost of the deterioration of the morale of the Services; and one of the results of Mr. Baxter's crusade was to bring on himself a well-merited rebuke from Mr. Grant Duff for his violation of the ordinary courtesy of a guest. In addition to this achievement, Mr. Baxter, after a considerable amount of friction and much heart-searching among military secretaries and A.D.C.'s, succeeded in forcing from the powers that be due recognition for his right, title, and precedence as a Privy Councillor and a Right Honourable. After all these exploits, it is clear that the right hon. gentleman is the very man to be chairman of the Select Committee on Indian Railways; at least, so thinks Her Majesty's Government. And so, Sir John Strachey and the other authorities on the question will enjoy the privilege of being cross-examined by Mr. Baxter.

THE Times of India has the following significant paragraph, referring to the reports current some time ago of Lord Ripon's intention to carry out Mr. Baxter's wishes, and disendow the Indian chaplains:—

"It will be noticed that the correspondence relating to what is known as the Disestablishment Question in India has been asked for in the House of Commons. If published in entirety it will afford curious reading. The recommendation from the Government of India to the Secretary of State was, as we said some time back, signed only by Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert; and was, we since hear, returned to India with the remark that Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert did not constitute the Government of India."

GENERAL KOMAROFF is to occupy Merv with his troops, and will establish a Russian administration there. And Lord Ripon, having marched down the hill three years ago, is now pondering how to march up again.

WE congratulate Dr. Vincent Richards on the important discovery he has made in regard to the propagation of cholera. The Englishman announces that Dr. Richards has succeeded in artificially producing cholera in pigs; so that at last we have something tangible to go upon in the search for a preventive.

WE regret to notice the death at Bankipore of Mr. Richard Van Gelder, Barrister-at-Law. He went out to India a few years since, and was most successful in his profession. We understand that he had just returned from Benares, where he had been to defend an important case, when he was attacked with small-pox, doubtless contracted there. His loss will be felt by numerous friends in the neighbourhood by whom he was much respected.

THE License Tax, which is retained by Lord Ripon, is thus condemned by the Times of India:—

"The forthcoming budget is the last that is likely to be issued under the auspices of Lord Ripon, and we can scarcely believe that, amid all his efforts at reform in so many directions, he will consent to leave the abolition of such an unjust, unfair, and unpopular tax to his successor. So far as we know there is not a good word to be said for the License Tax. It brings in the paltry sum of 49 lakhs. It taxes the poor and leaves the rich almost untouched. The Bank of Bombay and all its branches pays the same amount as a struggling broker. A merchant who happens to live in one presidency pays Rs. 800 per annum, in another Rs. 500, in a third Rs. 200."

IT is reported that the Mongal Chiefs in reply to the letters sent to them by General Gholam Khan advising them to submit to Abdul Rahman, and desist from assisting the Bandit Chief Lada, have stated that they have no confidence in the Ameer, and that they will accordingly fight against him.

REPORTS from beyond the frontier seem to show that, besides his supposed designs on Bajour and other semi-independent territory in that direction, the Ameer is anxious to obtain a recognition of his sovereignty from some of the tribes of the Sulaiman hills on our Derajat frontier—Waziris and others. According to one story, he had even some idea of appointing governors over the Waziris.

THE Sind Gazette says that the Hurnai works are being pushed on with great vigour under Colonel Brown, R.E. There are at the present moment no less than 18,000 labourers employed on the different works between Nari Gorge and Hurnai, a distance of about fifty-five miles.

ACCORDING to the same authority, Nawab Hassan Ali Khan, Attaché to the Biluchistan Agency, has been directed to hold himself in readiness to proceed to Persia, there to join Colonel Stewart, who is at present engaged on special duty in Northern Persia.

THE Englishman says:—

"The burning of the ship Aurora at Garden Reach, and the alarming spectacle which was witnessed on Wednesday of the Hughli in flames, ought to settle, once and for all, the question of the establishment of a Calcutta outpost on the Matla. The absolute necessity of providing a depot for kerosine, the existence of which will relieve the Calcutta river from the terrible danger to which it is now subject, puts an end to all controversy as to the claims of Diamond Harbour in opposition to those of Port Canning. In addition to the other arguments against the immediate utilisation of Diamond Harbour as an outport, there is this irresistible one, that the storage of kerosine at the Hughli outport, where the wharfage space is rigidly limited by physical conditions, would render the place unavailable for the landing of other classes of merchandise. At Port Canning, on the other hand, not less than four miles of wharfage can be at once rendered available for commercial purposes. On that enormous area, kerosine might be stored to any extent with perfect safety."

THE following paragraphs of the review by the Chief Commissioner of the administration of the Land Revenue Department of the Central Provinces, for the year ended the 30th of September 1883, regarded the beneficial effects of opening up railways in those provinces, will be read with interest:—

"The Chhattisgarh Division is now the most interesting, if not the most important, division in the Province. During the year, the opening of the railway to Nandgaon and the projects which are now in hand for railway extension, have brought it, and everything connected with it, into prominence; and have already begun to modify materially the agricultural condition of the tract. The reports now before the Chief Commissioner show that prices have very largely risen. Thus wheat, which in June, 1882, was selling at fifty-four seers per rupee in Bilaspur, is now selling at thirty-two. During the same period rice has risen from eighty-one to fifty-one seers; and this notwithstanding the general abundance of the harvest. Changes of this kind will profoundly affect the condition and habits of the people and their capacity to meet the Land Revenue demand. They will cease to treat rice as an article with scarcely any money value, and will not, as in some districts they now do, allow a large portion of the crop to be lost through neglect and delay in gathering it. Another effect of the opening of the new railway will, it is believed, be to give an exceptional impulse to wheat cultivation. Inquiries are being made as to the extent to which wheat is replacing other crops; but it is already quite certain that much new land has been of late put under wheat. The importance of wheat as an article of export was dwelt upon in the statement of the Finance Minister in March last; and there is every reason to believe that Chhattisgarh, at all events, will do its best in fulfilling the anticipations there expressed. It may be mentioned here that the Deputy Commissioner of Seoni notices the keen demand for pissi wheat in his district. He says that it has driven out almost all other rabi crops."

THE Times of India gives the following obituary for the week ending March 7:—"The Cochin Sultan (son of the late King of Delhi), Major A. B. Douglas, 4th Bengal N.I."

THE Englishman gives the following on the Calcutta Freight Market for the week ending March 4:—

"We have had another quiet week, and not much business doing; Canal rates have remained unchanged, except for dead weight, which has slightly advanced, while sailing vessels have maintained the advance previously obtained, as there has been a fair demand for jute tonnage. One vessel fixed for London, one for New York, and two for the country trade, leaving our unfixed tonnage about 41,200 tons. For London via Suez Canal.—No transactions of importance to report. The Armenia and Aston Hall filled up with jute, cotton, and light freight at 27s. 6d., and rapeseed at 30s., while the Carmona, City of London, and Karamania secured 30s. for measurement and light freight, giving longer shipment. The Rewa berthed with saltpetre at 17s. 6d., rice at 20s. and 22s. 6d., and the Karamania secured 25s. for sugar. For forward loading the ss. Cashmere has taken the berth for all April loading with wheat at 30s., linseed at 37s. 6d., and rapeseed at 40s. For Liverpool via Suez Canal.—Nothing to report. For Mediterranean Port.—Nothing to report. For London via Cape.—A fair inquiry for jute tonnage springing up enabled the Candahar and Millwall to complete their requirements at 32s. 6d. The Waterloo took the berth with saltpetre at 15s., jute and cotton at 32s. 6d., and rapeseed at 35s., securing almost a full cargo. For Liverpool via Cape.—The Baroda fills up with owner's cargo. For Dundee via Cape.—Nothing fresh to report, no more demand at present. For Mauritius.—The Broomhall secured coolies at Rs. 70 per head, and rice for stiffening at four annas, and the Star of Greece was chartered for a full cargo of grain at fifteen annas. For New York.—The Teviotdale obtained a charter at 86¼ for usual assorted cargo. Our unfixed tonnage stands at 41,120 tons.

WE take the following account of the Calcutta Tea Market for the fortnight ending March 4, from Messrs Carritt and Co.'s Fortnightly Market Report:—

"Public sales were held on the 21st ult., when 8,904 packages were offered, of which 8,654 changed hands. The quality was hardly up to the average of the previous auctions, and there was not much animation noticeable in the biddings. Prices showed a further decline, Souchong kinds and broken teas of ½d. to 1d. per lb., and Pekoes and broken Pekoes of 1d. to 2d. in many cases."

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

THE following report on the state of the season and prospects of the crops for the week ending the 26th ultimo are as follow:—

"There has been rain during the week in three districts of the Madras Presidency, in Sind, in parts of Central India, and the Central and North Western Provinces, also in parts of Assam and Bengal. The fall generally has been too slight to affect agricultural prospects. Harvesting continues in active progress in the Madras Presidency and Mysore, and standing crops promise well. In Bombay the rabi is being cut, and with the exception of some crops in the Surat and Shikarpur districts, which have suffered from insects and blight, the prospects are fair. In the Berars, Hyderabad, Central India States, and Rajputana the rabi promises well, but in the Ulwar State the crops on unirrigated lands are reported to be withering for want of rain. Rain is also urgently needed in the south eastern districts of the Punjab; elsewhere in that province the prospects are satisfactory. The rain which fell in the North-West Provinces during the week under report was slight and insufficient, and the out-turn of the rabi on unirrigated lands is expected to be below the average. On irrigated lands the crops are fair. A scarcity of fodder is beginning to be felt in two districts. In Bengal the prospects remain unchanged. The standing crops in Chota Nagpore, Behar, and the Burdwan district promise a poor outturn; elsewhere in the province they are fair. The preparation of the land for the next rice season is in hand, and the early rabi crops are being cut. In Assam the reaping of the mustard crop is nearly over, and prospects are good. No report has been received from British Burma. Cholera exists in most districts of the Madras Presidency, but is abating. Small-pox is general in the Bombay Presidency and the North-Western Provinces; in other provinces the public health is on the whole good. Prices are unchanged."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times dated March 23:—

"The course of affairs in Egypt continues to attract some attention from the Native Indian Press, its remarks being frequently uncomplimentary and sometimes almost seditious. The Mahomedan Observer attributes all the recent troubles to the vacillating and uncertain policy of the British Government. The Bengalee says that the English are in Egypt ostensibly for the benefit of the Egyptian people, but really for the benefit of the foreign bondholders, whose demands have converted Egypt into a veritable desert. The Bombay Native Opinion says that the charm of British success lies not so much in its guns as in its gold, and describes General Gordon's slavery proclamation as a "disgusting guarantee," and a "piece of moral turpitude." Great satisfaction is expressed by all the native newspapers at the resolution of the Government not to employ Indian troops in the Soudan.

"The Indian Press, with few exceptions, has given a very favourable reception to the Budget. Such criticisms as have been passed upon it are for the most part directed to two points, in connection with which the Indian Government can hardly be held responsible—namely, the failure to state whether the Public Works Loan will be raised in London or in Calcutta, and the cautious tone adopted on the subject of railway extension.

"On the first of these points the Press and the mercantile community are practically unanimous. It is urged on all sides that as the Secretary of State has ample information regarding the inexpediency of borrowing in silver, he should have instructed Sir Auckland Colvin to announce that the loan would be raised in gold, and thereby have saved business men an uncertainty which must have a disturbing effect upon their transactions.

"As regards railway extension, there is, perhaps, not quite the same unanimity, for, although that subject now occupies a large share of the public attention, there is some difference of opinion as to the mode in which extensions should be carried out. It is a remarkable fact in connection with this question of the railways that the native Press, in the vernacular as well as in English, has begun to show great interest in the subject, and to discuss with intelligence the various proposals put forward by the Bengal and Bombay Chambers of Commerce. Some few of these newspapers, it is true, look with suspicion on railway enterprise, and describe it as benefiting England rather than India. One or two would prefer to see the money spent upon canals, on the ground that they supply the means of irrigation as well as the means of transport. But the great majority fully recognise the importance of the increasing network of railways, both as a protection against famine and as a means of developing trade and enabling Indian products, especially wheat, to compete more advantageously with those of foreign countries. But the native, like the English journals, differ greatly when they come to consider the question whether the construction of new lines should be undertaken by State or by private agency; and they do not appear to recognise the fact—which is one generally admitted by their European contemporaries—that India can borrow to greater advantage in the London than in the Calcutta market.

"The Agricultural Department of the Government has published an account of certain inquiries regarding the production of wheat which have been latterly undertaken at the instance of the Secretary of State. From this document it appears that the area under wheat in British India comprises about 20,000,000 acres, yielding between 5,500,000 and 6,000,000 tons. The corresponding area in the native territory is about 6,000,000 acres, and yields 1,500,000 tons. The production per acre varies from an average of thirteen bushels in the North West Provinces and Oude to seven in Berar. The soft white wheat which commands the highest price in the European markets grows to greatest perfection in Northern India, Rajpootana, and Guzerat. The soft red wheat ranks next, and comes chiefly from the Nerbudda Valley. It is estimated that when the railway system is in a more developed state one-fourth, or possibly more, of the total outturn will in good years be available for export. The cost of production varies greatly in different provinces. It is calculated for Northern India at about 12s. the quarter. Some doubt exists as to whether the soil has not deteriorated under wheat cultivation; but the answers on this point are described as being, on the whole, encouraging.

"It is announced that the first section of the Bengal and North Western Railway, from Goggra Ferry to Baraitche, a distance of seventy miles, will be opened for traffic on April 2; while the remainder of the line will probably be ready for use by November. It is also stated that the Nawab of Joonaghur proposes to construct, at his own expense, a line of railway from Jaitpore to the seaport of Virawul. This will afford a new outlet for the cotton trade between Cutch and Bombay.

"The Viceroy arrived in Simla yesterday. He spent a week at Puttiala, where he formally opened the Mohender College, the foundation stone of which was laid by Lord Northbrook, in 1875, during the reign of the late Maharajah.

"The promised memorial of the Calcutta Exhibition will take the form of an enlargement of the existing Indian Museum, by the construction of new wings for the accommodation of fine arts, ethnological, and economic sections.

"The Calcutta Englishman announces another important result in the investigation of the causes of cholera. Dr. Vincent Richards, civil surgeon of Goalundo, has succeeded in doing what the German Commission have hitherto failed to accomplish. He has produced the disease artificially. The subjects of his experiment were pigs, and after many trials he communicated to one of them what appears to have been genuine cholera, the animal having died within three hours after the cholera poison had been administered.

"The Central Asian question has been much discussed by the Anglo-Indian Press during the last few weeks, and the assurances given by the Ministers in Parliament are looked upon as far from satisfactory. It is urged that the Government should lose no time in completing the railway to Quetta and the Pisheen Valley and otherwise in strengthening its position along the frontier. The Pioneer recommends the appointment of a Commission to demarcate the northern boundaries of Afghanistan. The Madras Mail considers that it is a poor satisfaction to India to know that the Ministry is determined to deal with this great matter after its own fashion, and goes on to say that it has hitherto been the fashion of this Ministry to sacrifice future security for present ease, by scuttling out of difficult positions. There is an almost absolute unanimity of opinion among Anglo-Indians as to the grave importance of Russia's last forward step. There is matter, too, for serious reflection in the tone of some of the more rabid native newspapers, which, assuming the rôle of a candid friend, have taken upon themselves to lecture England on her duty to India and on the necessity of making concessions to the people, so as to secure their friendship and assistance, now that Russia is at her gates."

Mr. James Buckingham has been gazetted major commandant of the Sibsagar Mounted Rifles.

Lieutenant-Colonel Gossett, of the 2nd Dorset Regiment (54th), who has just rejoined his battalion at Peshawar, from being officiating military secretary to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, will not, it is believed, remain long unemployed, he being now fully qualified for staff employ, having recently passed in languages. Colonel G. B. Wolseley, assistant adjutant general at Lahore, it is believed, is likely to go home for six months shortly, which will leave an officiating vacancy open; while on Aug. 8 Lieutenant-Colonel Combe will complete his five years' tenure on the staff of the Adjutant and Quarter-master-General's Department combined.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In the discussion provoked by Russia's occupation of Merv, I presume to ask if you will insert the following extracts from papers I have published on the Eastern Question.

From a paper on the future of the Eastern Question in Allen's Army and Navy Magazine for April, 1881:—

"As regards the course to be adopted by the British Government in the face of Russia's progress against the Turcoman's, let the necessity for Russia's advance to Merv be no longer disputed. The great Power whose outposts have stretched out to Kuldja and the northern slopes of the Tiah Shah ranges, whose caravans traverse the regions of High Tartary, and penetrate the cities of Western Asia; this same Power that rules in the three Khanates of Central Asia, that commands the passage of the Oxus, that has undisturbed command over the waters of the Caspian, is that Power to be checked and debarred from the accomplishment of what little remains to complete her great task, because her occupation of the oasis of Merv would be a menace and would facilitate her command of positions the British Government has never attempted nor desired to occupy? It does seem that the oasis of Merv, and the line of the Attrek route, is as much a necessity to Russia in the fulfilment of her destiny in Asia, as is the passage through Egypt to the British Government, in the maintenance of communications between the Mediterranean and her empire in India.

"But at the proper time and in no uncertain terms Russia should be made to understand that, though her advance to Merv would not be opposed, a step southward in the direction of Meshed and Sarrahkha, and any attempt to encroach upon the integrity of Persia and Afghanistan would be seriously opposed. Simultaneously, every effort should be made to improve our relations with Persia and Afghanistan; striving to induce both Powers to see the reciprocity of interests, and the necessity for mutual accord and co-operation in resisting the encroachments of a Northern Power. Mutual mistrust may not be overcome, and the traditional animosities between the Persians and the Afghans may not cease, but it is worth the effort to induce common action to meet a common danger. It should, moreover, be the unceasing effort of the British Government to improve political and commercial relations with both Powers, and to secure maintenance of the integrity of their dominions."

From a paper on the power and position of Russia in Asia, published in the Army and Navy Magazine, Feb. 23, 1884:—

"As regards Persia and Afghanistan, the time has arrived when Russia should be called upon to assist in establishing a modus vivendi for Russia in Asia, Persia, Afghanistan, and British India. At a conference between the four Powers, let the limits of Persian and Afghan territory be definitively fixed, and the frontier of Russia in Asia and of British India be clearly defined. Then let the territories of Persia and Afghanistan be declared a neutral zone, barred alike to Russia and to the British Government of India—Persia and Afghanistan at the same time accepting the frontiers assigned them—any future encroachment on the part of either Power to be resisted by the joint and combined action of the other three parties to the engagement. Let there be combined action also in regard to the construction of any railways from the frontiers of Russia or British India through Persian or Afghan territory. Looking at the aggressive policy of Russia in Asia, and at the antecedents of Persia and Afghanistan, such a peaceable solution of the question as is here proposed may seem utopian and impracticable, but in no other way does a peaceable solution appear possible. Russia is narrowing the limits of territory that separate her frontiers from those of British India, and she may soon reach what has been termed the 'Gate of India,' Herat. The danger of her proximity is imminent, and if peaceable measures cannot be adopted to check his further progress, there can only be an appeal to the arbitrament of war."—Your obedient servant,

EDWARD H. PASKE, Colonel.

Merrrow, Guildford, March 10, 1884.

The surplus native infantry lines at Alipore and Dorunda are to be dismantled.

It is rumoured that No. 2 Company, Bombay Sappers, now in Beluchistan, will probably be detained in that country for employment on the Hurnai route, but it is considered almost certain that the company will return to India next relief season.

The pay code for all India, revised edition, Volume I., is now ready for issue, but Volume II. will not be ready for some days yet. The first volume is now a handy book to use, but, whether it will be found as useful as the previous editions or not, time will tell. Our own impression is that it will not, as much useful matter has been eliminated for incorporation in other works which will have to be kept up by officers and others concerned. Indeed, when the military series of Indian regulations is completed, an officer will require a mule to carry them when on the march!

SELECTED ARTICLES.

THE HYDERABAD RESIDENCY.—SPEECHES BY MR. CORDERY AND MAJOR TREVOR.

SOME interesting speeches were made at a dinner given at the Residency, Chudderghat, on the 23rd February by Mr. Cordery in honour of the Nizam's new Minister. In responding to the toast to his health, which was proposed in felicitous terms by the Resident, Salar Jung said:—"It will always be my endeavour to deserve the good opinion and kind sentiments you have expressed regarding me to-night. You have alluded, Sir, to the distinguished services which my father rendered to His Highness's State and the British Government during his long career. I need not tell you how grateful I am to you for your words concerning him. From the commencement of his career it was my father's chief aim to deserve the confidence and support of the British Government and of his own Sovereign, by his loyalty and devotion to the interests of his country, and there was nothing he valued so much as the friendship of the successive residents who represented the British power at the Court of Hyderabad. How he secured and continued all his life to enjoy that confidence, is matter of history. Ladies and gentlemen, it will be my earnest endeavour to tread in the footsteps of my father, and I shall ever consider it my greatest good fortune if I can secure the confidence and support that was extended to him. And you who have listened to the kind and cordial expressions to which utterance has been given to-night, will share with me the feeling that my good fortune has already commenced. It is not necessary for me to refer to the past, but I may say with perfect truth that if there was anything to console me for the overwhelming loss I suffered last year, it was the great kindness shown me by the British representative and the whole of the European community of the cantonment and of Hyderabad. To Mr. Cordery my thanks are chiefly due. During these last twelve months in moments of difficulty and doubt, I have never appealed to him in vain; a word of encouragement or advice has always been at my disposal. If he has ever had occasion to find fault with me, it has been as the criticism of a friend. I am fully conscious of the responsibility I have undertaken in accepting the high post I now occupy, and if it were not for the certainty I feel of the Resident's support, I should despair of success, but with the countenance of Her Majesty's Government and of my own sovereign, and with the friendship and guidance of the residents at Hyderabad, I have entered on my career full of confidence and hope."

Major Trevor's health was next proposed by the Resident, who is reported to have spoken as follows:—"Ladies and Gentlemen,—I rise once more, because I do not think we are likely to find another so convenient an opportunity of wishing God-speed, a happy voyage, and a pleasant furlough to Major Trevor. He has been a part of this Residency since 1867, or for seventeen years, and the severance of any such connection must rouse on both sides some feeling of regret, however much it may be tempered by the agreeable anticipations of a well-earned leave. He may take, however, a retrospect of his services here, of which he may well be proud. During all that period, passed in an atmosphere, which I hope I shall not be deemed undiplomatic in designating as at any rate sometimes stormy, not a breath of slander has ever rested on his name. I speak this advisedly: for the recent Jesplicable efforts to sully a more than ordinarily spotless reputation have resulted, as it was inevitable that they should result, in his complete exoneration from all imputations upon his character by the Government which we both serve. No further vindication is either desired or needed by him, and I am not sure that I should have taken any notice at all of these calumnies upon this occasion, were it not that amongst other innumerable false misconceptions, even his departure now has been attributed to the attempts to blacken his name. As a matter of fact it was arranged that he should have taken his leave in September last, months before the occasion for the contempt which we all feel for such calumnies as have arisen at all. The ordinary course of his promotion must prevent his returning to his present post more than a year hence. Seldom has any assistant or secretary been more trusted; never has any more justified the trust. I can say this, not on my own authority only, but on that of six residents preceding me. And I will add that wherever single-minded devotion to the work before him and absolute freedom from self-seeking or self-interested motives is appreciated at its due worth—wherever an integrity which has been carried (as is well known in Hyderabad) to a refusal of some advantages and privileges held by others to appertain to his position—wherever, I say, the principle of this abstention receives its proper meed of esteem—wherever, above all, the faculty of true and lasting friendship, of which I perhaps may boast myself the oldest possessor here, though many others have felt its charm in the kindness of his wit and the readiness of his repartee—wherever such qualifications as these are valued as they deserve to be, there, as now, his departure will be regarded with the same regret, mixed with the same pleasant recollections of the past and good wishes for the future as I now ask you to echo with all your hearts, as they assuredly come from mine."

Major Trevor, in acknowledging the compliment, said:—"Mr. Cordery, Nawab Salar Jung, Ladies and Gentlemen,—It is one of the infirmities of noble minds that they are apt to measure the services of others more by the standard of their own generosity than according to the value of those services. The kind words which have just been spoken remind me of this truth, but I am none the less very grateful for them and to you, ladies and gentlemen, for the manner in which this toast has been received. The compliment is enhanced by being paid on an occasion like this when we are met to do honour to the young Dewan of this important State. For myself I can only say that a man cannot be many years at a place, and it is more than sixteen years since I first came to Hyderabad, without leaving it with mixed feelings. It is of course a great pleasure to be going home on leave to those who are near and dear to us, and I am very thankful to have got my leave, but good byes to friends are full of regrets, and I leave some friends behind me. It has been my lot to see our guest of this evening mount almost from infancy to the seat occupied by his distinguished father, which we all hope and pray he will adorn, if possible, in equal degree, and also to see the youthful Sovereign of this State pass from the arms of his nurse through the years of his minority to the charge of his dominions. There have been changes during this period. When I first came here, I had to ride on a mail-cart from Sholapur, which was then the limit of the railway, and I recall with pleasure that I was received on arrival by the then first assistant, Mr. Cordery, and that from that day commenced a friendship which is one of the treasures of my life. I know no man from whose lips I valued commendation more, and no one who can better afford to praise a subordinate. He has referred to the scurrilous attacks which have been made on me in a certain newspaper. They will pass as a breath on a mirror. They can only discredit their authors. I may have made many mistakes, but I am quite sure that the general verdict on me here will say, when I am gone, that I always tried to do what I believed to be my duty, with single-mindedness and in fear of no man. Ladies and gentlemen, I thank you for your kindness and wish you all good-bye."

THE RAILWAY CONFERENCE.

A CONFERENCE which will probably have important results on passenger and goods traffic on Indian lines of railway, is now in the third week of its sittings at the office of the Public Works Department. All the important guaranteed lines are represented by their agents or traffic managers, and the State railways by an officer nominated by the Government of India. The conference is presided over by Colonel Hancock, R.E., consulting engineer for railways in Bombay. Besides the East Indian Railway and the lines of State railway under Government direct management, the lines represented are the Eastern Bengal the Delhi and Rohilkund, the Sind, Punjab and Delhi, the Bombay and Baroda, the Great Indian Peninsula, the Madras, the South Indian, the Southern Mahratta. The objects of the conference are mainly the simplification and assimilation of the different tariffs for goods on the various lines, by the elimination, as far as possible, of the varying conditions on which goods are transported in various parts of India, and the settlement, for at least a very considerable number of articles, of a uniform rate at which they will be carried over the lines. Various other questions have come under discussion, and amongst other matters the following may be mentioned as being of most general interest. It has been settled that, instead of the varying rates now levied as terminal charges, being charges to cover the cost of loading and unloading and the use of accommodation at stations, a fixed charge shall be made on through traffic of six pies a maund, when such through traffic is not carried at special rates not including terminals, the charge being shared by each of the railways owning the termini. A uniform rate of insurance of goods has also been fixed, ranging from $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. for distances not exceeding two hundred and fifty miles to 1 per cent. for distances up to one thousand miles. These rates are doubled for horses, the declared value of which is over five hundred rupees. All goods are to be divided into two great sections, the first including the comparatively small number of articles which are of importance as yielders of revenue, the rates on these being generally fixed specially at a low level to attract and develop trade. In the second section are entered the large number of articles individually of no importance, and in the aggregate not giving more than ten per cent. of the gross revenue of the railways. For each of these it is proposed to fix a uniform rate for all lines, the rate on any article not to be higher, we understand, than the lowest rate now charged for it on any line, and the rate now fixed is not to be departed from until altered either by another conference or after due notice to be given by any railway. Thus, as an illustration, a box of books sent, say, from Calcutta to Bellary might at present be charged two pie a maund on the East India Line, four pie on the G.I.P., and three pie on the Madras line. In future the box would be charged two pice on each line. Passengers' baggage is in future to be carried at a uniform rate of two pice a maund, and the free allowance has been fixed at two maunds for 1st class, one maund for 2nd class, twenty seers for intermediate, and fifteen seers for 3rd class passengers. The free allowance for 1st and 2nd class passengers is higher than that which exists at present. The system of allowing passengers to buy tickets during the day instead of having to take them just before the train starts is to be generally adopted. This will be a great convenience—as anybody knows who has had to take his tickets and have his luggage weighed and registered by a sleepy clerk late at night or early in the morning. A further concession, which ought to have been made long ago, has been given by the decision that at junctions and ferries, when the luggage of through passengers has to be conveyed from one train to another, the transfer will be made by the railways without charge. Also at the large stations the railways will employ a staff of porters for the conveyance, without charge, of luggage from the station doors to the train, and vice versa. This is a more important matter than it seems, for the shouting and scrambling of half-a-dozen porters each clinging desperately to a small package and each demanding payment sufficient for the carriage of the whole, form an intolerable nuisance at most large stations. It has been further settled that 3rd class passengers shall be booked through, without restriction, all over India, the present system ceasing under which a man who wants to go from Calcutta to Surat is booked as far as Delhi only on the East Indian Railway, has then to take another ticket on the Rajputana-Malwa line which books him only as far as Ahmadabad, and has then to take another ticket from the Baroda Railway for the rest of his journey. Not only is this objectionable, as giving a needless amount of trouble by compelling a man to take three tickets instead of one, but it probably acts as a deterrent to native travellers, many hesitating to commence a journey when they are not quite certain that they can proceed beyond a certain point short of their destination. Prepayment of parcels is to be optional except in regard to perishable or dangerous goods. At present, prepayment being compulsory on certain lines, it sometimes happens that a parcel addressed to a person is received after he has, in the nomadic fashion peculiar to Indian official life left it on transfer to another five hundred miles away, and when it cannot be sent on to him. Lastly, it has been decided that the establishment of a clearing house on the model of the railway clearing house in England is desirable. These are the most important of the matters which have so far come under consideration. The conference is still engaged on the separation of the list of goods into the two great sections referred to above, and the public will expect that the selection will be made in a judicious and liberal spirit, that uniform charges for carriage all over India will be the rule, not the exception, and that most of the intricate and varying conditions attached by different lines to the conveyance of goods will disappear from the tariffs.

It is to be understood that the proceedings of the conference touch only through traffic, that is, traffic carried over two or more lines. Local traffic, that is, the traffic which is confined to one line, is not dealt with, but there is little doubt that the rules which will govern through traffic must necessarily also be applied to local traffic. The proceedings of the conference are subject to the sanction of the Boards of Directors of the guaranteed lines and of the Government. There is, however, little apprehension that they will not be confirmed, and we may look with some confidence to the operation of the settlement now being made for the introduction of some greatly needed reforms in Indian railway traffic.

The conference has now nearly finished its labours, and at its meeting yesterday the last of the chief questions before it were discussed. These related to the charges for parcels and animals. It was also resolved that a similar conference to the one now sitting should assemble in Calcutta or some other centre every two years. If this resolution is executed, the railway companies are likely to profit no less than the public. The opportunity for a mutual interchange of ideas in railway affairs offered by these periodic conferences cannot fail to be of advantage to the managers of lines, and the result will tend to the introduction of greater facilities and conveniences to those who travel or send their goods by railway.

THE GERMAN CHOLERA COMMISSION.

THE members of the German Cholera Commission, Drs. Koch, Fischer, and Gaffky, proceed in a few days to Gosalando and Darjiling to prosecute further inquiries on the subject which they have in hand. After a short stay at the latter place they return to Germany, but hope to be back in India at the beginning of next cold weather, when the success of their labours this season will no doubt ensure them a hearty welcome. The departure of the distinguished scientists at a time when their work in India has produced results so fruitful is caused chiefly by the fact that the experiments on which the chief reliance is placed in their investigations are of a kind that cannot be favourably prosecuted during the hot weather. At this juncture, therefore, it may be worth while to briefly record how far those investigations have forwarded the great inquiry, answer to which has been so long sought, as to the etiology of cholera. The investigations of the Commission in Egypt and India may be roughly described to have established three facts, of which medical science, though it may hitherto have had glimmerings of the truth, was without the clear knowledge now afforded it. In the first place, in all cases of true cholera which have been the subject of examination, the existence has been proved of a certain minute organism, or bacillus. Bacilli have been found in great number in the intestines of persons who have died of cholera, and in the dejecta of cholera patients. In the second place, bacilli similar to these have not been found in connexion with other diseases, such as diarrhoea and dysentery, which have some resemblance to cholera. In the third place, bacilli exactly corresponding to those observed in cholera cases have been found in the water of a tank in the district of Baliaghatta, Calcutta, in the neighbourhood of which tank there was a sporadic outbreak of cholera. The bacilli were found in the water in great abundance, and, as the outbreak subsided, coincidentally the water became clearer of the bacterium. While the investigators have gathered these facts, all attempts to propagate cholera by means of the bacilli, whether those found in the water, in the human body, or in cholera dejecta, have been without success. Many experiments have been made with a view to reproduce the disease by inoculation in animals, but all have failed. Mice, cats, and dogs have been experimented upon, but without success. Matter containing the bacilli has been mingled with the food of these subjects, but the health of these animals has not apparently been disturbed.

The discovery that there was a microscopic parasite of peculiar and special form present in all cases of true cholera was made by the Commission during their sojourn in Egypt, and it has been fully confirmed in the course of the further investigations made in Calcutta. The utmost efforts of the Commission in Egypt, however, failed to discover the parasite outside of the human subject. The further link in the chain of connexion between the bacillus and the disease was found on the discovery of the parasite in the water of the Baliaghatta tank. To complete the chain it now remains to artificially produce the disease by means of the bacillus. As we have said, the experiments made with this view on various animals have so far been without the desired success. As the experiments are not likely to be abandoned, the wished-for result may yet be obtained. Dr. Koch, by investigation similar to those upon which he is now engaged, ascertained some years ago that the disease of splenic fever in animals was produced by a minute parasite, and he further artificially propagated the malady by means of the parasite. A still more important discovery was made by the same distinguished savant subsequently, when he demonstrated the existence in tubercle or consumption of another minute parasite, by means of which he again succeeded in artificially producing the disease. Other investigators have found the disease among fowls known as "fowl cholera" is caused by a parasite peculiar to it, and there is reason to believe that the malaria associated with the Roman Campagna is due also to a special bacillus, for the organism is found to swarm in the air and earth of that locality, being most numerous in the worst spots. These cogent cases go strongly to show that the bacillus now discovered by Dr. Koch and his colleagues is the long-sought-for cholera germ.

The Commission propose to take with them abundance of material for the prosecution of their investigations in Germany until their return to India next cold weather, but their hopes of success are mainly based on the inquiries which they trust they will be able to institute when they come back. On their return they also hope to devote some attention to an inquiry on the subject of malaria.

THE ENGLISH PRESS ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

THE Party of Anarchy in Ireland has received so many solid and tangible proofs of the fact that the present Government is amenable to pressure, that little wonder need be felt if it refuses to take no for an answer to its recent proposals to reopen the Land question there. Rumours are already rife of a determination, on the part of at least a large section of the party, to renew the agrarian agitation in a more vigorous and aggressive form than ever; and even if a few moderate men recoil from the horrors of such a prospect, it is only too probable that they will be "rushed" into action by the wilder and more lawless spirits with whom they are associated. If Mr. Parnell were to hesitate, there is always Mr. Davitt ready to force his hand; and the feebleness of the Government which was a party to the Kilmainham Treaty is a standing notification to all whom it may concern that contentment is folly, and that all things are possible to those who dare boldly. Telegrams from India show that Mr. Gladstone's Viceroy is there busily engaged in offering precisely those incitements to avarice and greed which have been employed with such disastrous effect in Ireland. Lord Ripon's latest achievement in Calcutta, by which his Excellency doubtless hopes to induce his Radical admirers in England to forget the ridiculous fiasco attending his famous "Ilbert Bill," is the introduction into the Legislative Council of India, of a Bill called "The Bengal Tenancy Bill," which the leading native paper declares must infallibly produce an agrarian revolution, and which promises to involve the most peaceful and prosperous provinces of India in something very like civil war.

We report to-day an interesting and instructive discussion of the provisions of this Bill, which took place last Friday at the meeting of the Society of Arts. Mr. W. S. Seton-Karr, who was Lord Lawrence's Foreign Secretary in India, opened the discussion with an exhaustive account of the history of the general question, together with some criticism of the details of the proposed legislation; and inasmuch as Mr. Seton-Karr may be regarded as the representative of the friendly critics of the Bill, his paper shows very clearly how little there is to be said in its favour. The Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal is a country almost purely agricultural, as populous as France and England put together. It has long enjoyed profound political quiet, and a steady advance in material prosperity which is absolutely unparalleled in any other parts of the Indian Empire. In 1793 Lord Cornwallis granted it a "Permanent Settlement"—that is to say, he promised all the landholders of the province, on the solemnly-plighted word of the British Government, "that no alteration will be made in the assessment which they have respectively engaged to pay, but that they and their heirs and lawful successors will be allowed to hold their estates at such assessment for ever." These were the words of the first of Lord Cornwallis's famous Regulations; and the second of them declared that "no power"—after the passing of these Regulations and their loyal acceptance by the zemindars or landholders—"will exist in the country by which the rights vested in the landholders by the regulation can be infringed, or the value of landed property affected." For nearly ninety years these rights have been scrupulously guarded by the sovereign power, though occasionally hungry or thriftless financiers have cast longing eyes on the wealth accumulated in Bengal by the beneficent operation of this righteous method of government. English honour and English honesty of purpose have hitherto respected the inviolability of these treasures; and it has been reserved for a Liberal Ministry and a Radical Viceroy to destroy the confidence of India in that honour and that honesty of purpose. Nor is it possible for Lord Ripon to allege that it is only the rich and the strong that he is proscribing and plundering by this legislation; for out of the 206,000 landowners of Bengal, no less than 197,000—or more than 95 per cent.—are peasant proprietors enjoying an income of less than £8 per annum! And these peasant proprietors are the men who will first of all be ruined by Lord Ripon's proposals; the Landholders' Association of Behar officially informed the Government, a few months ago, that the mere introduction of the Bill had brought down the selling value of all small estates to exactly one-half of what it had previously been—thereby ruining all those peasant proprietors whose lands were mortgaged or in any way at the mercy of creditors.

"And what is it," our readers will ask, "that Lord Ripon and Mr. Gladstone hope to effect by this wholesale devastation?" Well, it may be briefly replied that they apparently wish to assimilate the condition of this peaceful and prosperous Indian province to that of Ireland; for the Bengal Tenancy Bill proposes to apply to agricultural Bengal all, and more than all the most rasing conditions of Mr. Gladstone's recent Irish legislation. A considerable share of the proprietary rights in each estate is to be taken away from the landlord and given—not to the cultivating tenant, but—to any one who chooses to buy up the rights of existing tenants either as a commercial speculation or for the purpose of harassing a hated enemy! The income of every landowner in Bengal is to be virtually at the mercy of the English competition-wallah who happens to be the civil servant in charge of his district, who will not only fix rates of rent, but will also have the sole power of sanctioning any contracts between landlord and tenant. No one will be allowed, even if he wishes it, to be a tenant-at-will; and if a landlord wishes to free himself from the annoyance of the worst possible tenant-at-will, he will have to sue him in the courts for enhancement of rent, and then pay him "compensation for disturbance" at the monstrous rate of ten times the enhancement demanded. The extreme limit of rent that is to be legal—and this not unless the ubiquitous Government officer consents—is never to exceed one-fifth of the estimated annual value of the produce of the land. Mr. Seton-Karr authoritatively assured the Society of Arts last Friday that this maximum rent will often prove not sufficient to meet the revenue demand of the Government on the land; and yet, he might have added, if the landowner does not pay the uttermost farthing of this land-tax before sunset on the day it is due, he is immediately ruthlessly sold up under the inexorable "sunset law," one of the most terrible engines of public vengeance ever invented by a despotic Government. Fixity of tenure and fair rents have already been peacefully established over about nine-tenths of the land of Bengal with the goodwill of the landlords; now they are to be thrust down the throats of these and all the other landlords of the province by the iron hand of the English Government; and, in addition, Lord Ripon insists on free sale and compensation for disturbance and abolition of freedom of contract, in defiance of all the traditions of Hindoo custom and even of Hindoo religion. Well may Sir Richard Garth, the Chief Justice of Bengal, say in an official minute presented to the Government, "I confess I view with horror and dismay the revolutionary provisions of the present Bill," and after this honest expression of opinion from the highest judicial officer in India, perhaps we ought not to be surprised that Mr. Cross was compelled last week to confess, in answer to a question from Mr. Stanhope, that the minute of the Chief Justice of Bengal had been virtually burked.

Lord Ripon, by his abortive Ilbert Bill, has utterly exasperated the whole English community of India, official as well as non-official; and now by the confiscatory provisions of this Tenancy Bill he is endeavouring to break down and ruin the most influential and the most loyal of the natives of India. The petition of the Behar landholders, presented to Parliament a fortnight ago, and signed by every rajah and zemindar in the province, concluded with these eloquent words:—"Your petitioners would further respectfully say that they have done nothing to deserve such treatment at the hands of the British Government. They have always been conspicuously loyal to the British Crown during the times of difficulty at the beginning of the century; and during the more troublous days of 1857 the zemindars of Bengal and Behar placed themselves, their influence, and their wealth ungrudgingly at the disposal of the Government. But if this wealth and this influence is destroyed, to what class of the community will the Government in future look for support? If the zemindars, whose welfare has always been bound up with the British Government, are sacrificed to visionary theories, what class of the community will be able in future to repose with confidence on—what had up to the present time been inviolable—the honour and good faith of the British Government.—Morning Advertiser."

INDIAN LAND AGITATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "GLOBE."

SIR,—Will you permit me to offer a few remarks regarding the paper on the Bengal Tenancy Bill, which was read before the Society of Arts by Mr. W. S. Seton-Karr, with Sir George Campbell, M.P., in the chair? It is hardly necessary to say that the paper was very able and very interesting to those who understand the subject of the Tenancy Bill, on which Mr. Seton-Karr is no mean authority. But the conclusion at which I arrived after listening to the paper, and to the animated discussion which followed, is that the attempt to push this bill through the Indian Legislative Council is premature. There seems to be hardly a single fact or position in connection with the proposed enactment which is not strongly disputed and contested. The leading points of the case may be stated briefly. What is the status of the zemindar or landlord? What is the status of the ryot or cultivator? Mr. Seton-Karr tells us most emphatically that it is essential to divest oneself of the idea that a landlord in Bengal corresponds to the English squire or owner in fee-simple. He says that "this attempted analogy, arising out of loose language, misleading translations, and forcible introduction of the English law of real property, though productive of some confusion and error, has long been abandoned by all but a very few." On the other hand, Mr. Charles Campbell, an old Bengal official, of experience very similar, and fully equal, to that of Mr. Seton-Karr, holds an exactly opposite opinion. He tells us the zemindar, or landlord, is a squire, and even more than a squire, and that all the language of the Indian Legislature in 1793 was intended to vest him with the equivalent of an estate in fee-simple. Which of these two witnesses are we to believe? It is rather suspicious that Mr. Seton-Karr has to explain away the laws of 1793 by accusing them of loose language and misleading translations, and the forcible introduction of the English law of real property. Is Mr. Seton-Karr aware of the interpretation which was put by Lord Lyndhurst in the Privy Council on the laws of 1793, as showing that the zemindars had an absolute dominion and ownership of the soil? Of course, this opinion of Lord Lyndhurst has now been disputed. But this violent difference of opinion and endless disputation is sufficient to show the danger of precipitating legislation, especially when the legislation is based on the assumption that the zemindar, or landlord, does not enjoy the status which he claims for himself. The tenor of the proposed Bill, called the Tenancy Bill, is to take away from the landlord certain rights which he foolishly and fondly believed to belong to him, and to convey them to the ryots and cultivators who have not asked for them, and have not been asked if they wished for them. The recent land legislation in Ireland provided the model on which the Bengal Tenancy Bill is framed, and if Mr. Barry, in his recent speech in the House of Commons, was correct in stating that the Irish land laws have only produced the three D's—discontent, dissatisfaction, and disturbance—may it not be expected that like causes will lead to like effects in Bengal? What then, is the status of the ryot or cultivator in Bengal? Is he really oppressed and rack-rented, and does he need to be protected and to be presented with new rights and privileges? Here again, we are met with conflicting evidence. Mr. Seton-Karr tells us that he was a friend of the ryots and familiar with their ways and manners. Does he describe them as oppressed and down-trodden? Far from it. He represents them as almost substantial yeomen, and as capable of combining to resist the legitimate claims for rent of their landlords in Eastern Bengal. Nevertheless he would legislate in favour of these ryots, but he would leave the people, whom he calls sub-ryots, apparently meaning the actual labourers on the soil, to take care of themselves. Here he immediately provoked the opposition of Sir James Caird and Sir George Campbell, who declared that the legislation which did not provide for the welfare of the labouring classes would be incomplete and inefficient. Certainly, the new Tenancy Bill provides no protection for them, but it leaves them to be rack-rented by superior owners and by the money-lenders into whose grasp they may fall. I have encroached too much on your space, but I have merely touched the fringe of a vast subject, and have striven to show that legislation is premature so long as the leading facts and principles are in doubt and dispute. It was urged by some speakers that the time for legislation is ripe, because the subject has been under discussion for nine years. I venture to say that they are wrong. The discussion began in 1870, and is now in its fifteenth year of gestation. But I very much incline to agree with the remark of Sir James Caird, who in his recent book on India, has told us that "the lesson to be drawn from the opposite results which came under his cognisance would seem to be that the less the Government and the courts of law interfere in the relation between landlord and tenant, the more likely are they to be satisfactorily arranged by the mutual interests of the parties."—I am, yours truly,

C. T. BUCKLAND.
Late Bengal Civil Service.

INDIAN LAND LEGISLATION.

In another column we print a letter on Lord Ripon's proposed land legislation, from one of the highest authorities on such matters. Mr. Buckland, it will be seen, contests the expediency of revolutionising the existing system, and it is easy to perceive, in spite of the studiously moderate tone of his letter, that he foresees danger ahead. As we said yesterday, when treating of the effect already produced on the native mind by Russia's annexation of Merv, it looks like sheer insanity to be pursuing a course certain to cause deep and lasting irritation among the most powerful class in the country. And all for what? Not to benefit the millions of cultivators, the real ryots, but to give larger profits to the middlemen and money-lenders. The ryots would remain just as much rack-rented and ground down as at present, while the land-owners would be made to hate British rule, by having their property confiscated for the advantage of people who are well able to look after their own interests. There is neither equity, nor humanity, nor statesmanship in the mad scheme, but, throughout, the same sort of fussy disposition to meddle and muddle which Lord Ripon exhibited in the Ilbert Bill. The Indian system of land tenure may be open to improvement in some points, but we do not hesitate to say that the Bengal Tenancy Bill would make matters worse, instead of better. If Lord Ripon cannot be restrained from experimental Socialism, the sooner he is recalled, the better for our Eastern Empire and the foundations on which it rests.—Globe.

THE INDIAN TEA ASSOCIATION'S ESTIMATE OF THE TEA CROP.

We have received the following from Mr. Barton, Secretary to the Indian Tea Association. In their Circular of October 4, the General Committee gave a revised estimate of the Indian Tea crop of 1883, based on actual results to July 31, and they have now the pleasure to hand you a statement of the outturn of the crop prepared from final returns, kindly supplied by all firms interested in Tea. The figures are as follow:—

|---|-----------------------------------|--|
| | lbs. | lbs. |
| Assam | 29,081,520 | 29,152,104 |
| Cachyr and Syhet | 17,264,720 | 17,136,387 |
| Dai-jeling and Doon's | 9,827,003 | 9,153,104 |
| Chittagong and Chota Nagpore | 1,210,205 | 1,114,168 |
| Dehra Doon, Kumaon and Kangra Valley | 2,616,252 | 2,660,000 |
| | 50,000,000 | 59,215,763 |
| Against the total production of 1882, of say | | 59,000,000 |

Taking the requirements of Government and the local consumption to be 1,500,000 lb., and the shipments to Australia, America and other places to amount to 800,000 lb., there would remain about 57,000,000 lb. of the crop of 1883 for export to Great Britain, against 54,000,000 lb. during the previous year.

Although the crops of the two past years have been nearly equal, the falling off in the shipments to Australia and America leaves an excess of 3,000,000 lb. to be exported to Great Britain during the current season.

INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.

A CORRESPONDENT has just been published between the Secretary of State for India and the Government of India on the constitutional robustness of candidates selected for the Civil Service of that country. The correspondence has grown out of an extract from a letter of the Government of Bombay to the Secretary of State, dated Jan., 1882, to the effect that the Bombay service comprised several members who could not sustain the labour of district work. In reply to the Secretary of State, who desired full particulars of these cases, the Bombay Government forwarded a list of cases (not given in the return now published), and repeated their opinion that too many of the gentlemen sent out were not robust enough for work, adding that the advantages of the service were such that the Government had a right to expect the candidates to possess the necessary physical strength. A confidential inquiry was then ordered, and the Government of India transmitted to the Secretary of State the reports received from the several local Governments and administrations, who were instructed to state not only whether their experience resembled that of the Government of Bombay, but also whether the civilians selected and trained under the recent regulations were physically inferior to their predecessors. This circular was answered by reports from Bengal, the North West Provinces and Oude, the Punjab, the Central Provinces, and British Burmah, to the effect that the experience of Bombay has not been repeated in any other part of India.—Times.

TOUR EXPENSES.

THE "tour expenses" of the highest officials are a rather heavy item. In the first year of Lord Ripon's viceroyalty his peregrinations and those of his councillors cost the country no less than £90,856, while the travelling expenses of all the local Governments during the same period was £20,888. The latter sum is not excessive, but the Government of India were more extravagant than usual. The amount in 1880-81 was nearly double what it was in 1873-74, and more than treble the charge for 1874-75. The figures for the eight years ending 1880-81 are as follows:—1873-74, £47,576; 1874-75, £27,864; 1875-76, £66,269; 1876-77, £81,788; 1877-78, £75,785; 1878-79, £66,360; 1879-80, £67,960; 1880-81, £90,856. The most remarkable thing about these figures, next to the largeness of the amounts, is the extraordinary disproportion between the charge for 1874-75 (£27,864) and that for 1880-81 (£90,856). The figures are quoted from a volume of statistics, showing the receipts and disbursements of each presidency and province from April 1, 1873, to March 31, 1881, which has just reached us from the Department of Finance and Commerce. We see that during 1880-81 the cost of the Governor of Bombay's staff and household was £19,890. The cost of the staff and household of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal in the same year was only £2,546, but the Bombay tour expenses were only £1,384, while those of Bengal were £5,243. In some cases the Bombay expenditure is lower than the public would wish it to be. For instance, in the last of the years under notice the Western Presidency spent only the beggarly sum of £337 upon Museums, while Bengal devoted £1,876 and Madras £1,458 to similar objects. The Natural History Society, who, we believe, are anxious to improve the Bombay Museum, should make a note of this fact.

REPORT ON THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY FOR 1882-83.

THE full "Report on the Administration of the Bombay Presidency for the year 1883-83" has now reached us, and we observe that unusual pains have been taken to make the red-letter chapters as complete as possible. This portion of the work is re-written or revised once every ten years, and on the last occasion on which it was done the compiler was assisted, among others, by the late Rev. Dr. Wilson, who contributed a learned chapter on tribes and languages. That chapter has been omitted from this year's issue, but otherwise few changes have been made in the form of the work. Although the subjects of the contents are much the same as usual, some of them have been treated entirely afresh, such, for instance, as the historical summary, which is from the able pen of Mr. James Campbell, editor of the Bombay Gazetteer. The census chapter is, of course, also new, the contributor being Mr. Baines, Census Commissioner for this Presidency. The chapter of the "Form of Administration" has been revised by Mr. H. A. Acworth, C.S., and that on "Land Revenues" by Colonel G. A. Laughton, of the Revenue Survey. The other chapters deal with the physical features of the country, area, climate, and chief states; the civil divisions of British territory; the system of public instruction; literary societies and religious institutions; and all have an parently been most carefully edited. We shall have other opportunities of noticing the report at length, but in the meantime we must congratulate the editor and compiler, Mr. Hamilton, on the admirable way in which he has performed his task.

SPRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

THE HON. A. B. MILLER.

HAVING regard to some of the most important incidents in the political history of India which have occurred during the last twelve months, the announcement of the appointment of Mr. A. B. Miller, as a member of the Bengal Council, which we are enabled to announce this morning, will be received with general and unqualified satisfaction. The services which he has been able to render to the country during the crisis through which it has recently passed, will render his presence at the Council Board, over which Mr. Rivers Thompson so ably presides, a source of special strength. Mr. Miller's usefulness in the Bengal Council will be specially important on account of the strong sympathy which is present in his mind with the growing commercial enterprises of Bengal, and which enables him to lend his wide and full legal experience to the cause of the promotion of the economical resources of the country. It is seldom that such a combination of practical experience and of enthusiastic desire to create new conditions of prosperity for a great community are to be found co-existent.

THE KANDAHAR RAILWAY.

THE most pronounced dogma of the present Liberal administration is an insistence on the reversal of every policy of the Beaconsfield Government in every part of the world. But a Nemesis is ever waiting upon the Gladstone Ministry compelling it to the adoption of the identical measures which it seeks to discredit. One such instance is now staring us in the face in reference to our Afghan Policy. We need not remind our readers that the late administration had resolved upon connecting our frontier beyond the Indus with Kandahar, by means of a railway, for strategical reasons, a portion of which work was commenced by the Indian authorities under Lord Lytton's Government. It will be in the recollection of every one that almost the first act of the present Gladstonian administration, on coming into power, was to stop all proceedings in that direction, and cease the preparations then being made for constructing a railway onwards from Sibi to Quetta and thence to Kandahar, as had been determined by the late Government, who regarded that position as one of paramount importance in dealing with the defence of our north west frontier against a Russian advance.

It is the ignominious fate of the present Ministry that events are for ever obtaining a mastery over them; and never are they found so weak and faltering as when endeavouring to depart from the lines of foreign policy laid down by their predecessors. It is even so with the Sibi-Kandahar railway. Nothing has been heard of this important military work, which had met with such ruthless condemnation for many months, yet for all that, it now appears that the Government are prepared to admit the necessity for carrying it on. A telegram lately informed us that "Mr. Gladstone, in replying to a question in the House of Commons, said that Government had reconsidered the subject of railway communication with the north west frontier of India, to extend as far as Quetta."

It is scarcely credible that not only has the Government fully "reconsidered" the subject, but it has for months past been busily engaged in acting upon that reconsideration, and occupied in carrying out the policy it had so rashly and unwarrantably condemned in its predecessors? During the past cold season working parties have been employed in the continuation of the work rudely interrupted years ago, and which, but for the perversion of party policy, might by this time have been far on its way to Kandahar. As if ashamed of adopting a project previously condemned, the work has been proceeded with, and appears in the accounts under the designation of a military road, but it has been constructed for carrying rails, and with a view to the early working of this line, which we are now told has been "reconsidered;" an expert has been for months past engaged in the northern districts of Beluchistan, boring for petroleum, which it was known existed there, with a view to utilising it for fuel in a country where coal does not exist. These boring operations, we are assured, have proved successful, and the next reply which the Secretary of State for India will be in a position to give the parliamentary questioner will be that a cheap, convenient fuel supply has been found for the Beaconsfield-Gladstone railway to Kandahar!

THE RUSSIAN ADVANCE.

OUR readers will recollect the famous declaration made by Sir Charles Dilke in March, 1881, during the Kandahar debate, when he opportunely exploded a shell in the ranks of the opposition by informing the House that he was able to state "that the very first act of the new Emperor, upon ascending the throne, was to recall General Skoboleff to St. Petersburg, and to put a stop to all operations which that General had been conducting in Asia." This announcement, completely illusory as it was, served its purpose, which was to secure a parliamentary majority in favour of the evacuation of Kandahar. The Russians are again employing precisely the same tactics. As a concession to English susceptibilities with respect to the occupation of Merv, General Rosenbach has been sent to replace General Tcherniaeff in Turkestan. But we must remember that in 1881 the Russians were so far from stopping operations on Skoboleff's retirement to Europe, that they prosecuted them with renewed vigour, pushing beyond Geok Tepe to Askabad; for it is a recognised maxim of the Russian Government never to give up an inch of conquered territory. Under the direction of General Annenkoff, Director of Military transport, a railway was constructed from Michaelovsk on the Caspian to Kizil Arvat, a distance of 144 miles, while a good road was carried on a farther distance of 145 miles, to Askabad, where fortified barracks were constructed for the reception of 5,000 men. Skoboleff's successful campaign, combined with the opportune completion of the railway from Tiflis to Baku, the great oil port on the Caspian, had the effect of transferring the Russian base of operations in Central Asia from Turkestan to the Caucasus. In 1869 a colony, professedly commercial, was established at Krasnovodsk (now practically superseded by its neighbour Michaelovsk) on the south east shore of the Caspian, near the spot where the Oxus is held to have once debouched. The customary turbulence of the neighbouring Turcoman tribes afforded the Russians the excuse they sought for making reconnaissances into the interior, and the successive defeats experienced in 1877-78 and 1879 by General Lomakin led to Skoboleff's celebrated Geok Tepe campaign. A few months ago we heard that they were at the outskirts of Serakhs. Now we know they are at Merv. From Merv to Herat it is not a "far cry," only about 270 miles. Herat is the frontier city of Afghanistan, and even so Russophil a statesman as Lord Hartington recently declared that the approach of Russia to that frontier would necessarily be viewed with serious displeasure by Great Britain. So far this serious displeasure has only been displayed in accelerating the construction of the railway to Quetta, and it will be interesting during the present crisis to watch the further action of the Government of which Lord Hartington is a member, if not a very influential one. As things stand at present, the position of Russia in the Attak, where she commands the roads into Korassan, give her supreme political influence at the Court of Teheran. Once upon a time when the advancing Cossack loomed but a dim and misty figure in the far north, English influence reigned paramount in the councils of Persia. Those days are gone.

It is worthy of note that news of the submission of Merv came not from the British Embassy at Teheran, but from St. Petersburg. While Lord Beaconsfield guided the helm of State this country possessed a Consul at Asterabad, a Persian town within hail of the Russian naval station of Asharuda on the Caspian, a news-writer at Meshed, and an agent (Major Napier) on the Turkoman frontier. The advent to power of Mr. Gladstone, who had wholly surrendered his judgment of Russian designs to the wily influence of the female Cossack emissary, "O. K.," put an end to all these wise and necessary precautions. The English Press pointed out the successive stages of the Russian advance, and the English Government persistently denied the accuracy of each fresh statement. From either Merv or Serakhs, Russia is now potential mistress of Herat, which she could occupy in much less than half the time we should require to advance on it from Quetta. Any future attempt on the part of England to prevent the annexation of Constantinople will infallibly launch a Russian column on Herat, the effect of which on the population of India need not be here discussed. The Russian base at Askabad is only ten or twelve days distant from Tiflis, the head-quarters of the Caucasian army, which numbers even in peace time 150,000 men. From Askabad to Herat the distance is only 388 miles, and the engineer, Lessar, who surveyed the country right up to the gates of Herat, states that it is so level, the highest point he crossed being only 900 feet above the surrounding country, that a railway could be run all the way. The lofty and dangerous passes, with which Russophil writers and spouters used to block the way between Merv and Herat are proved to have no existence out of their own fertile imaginations. The Russian plea for her conquests in Central Asia—for her par tatonnements mode of advance—has invariably been the turbulence of the neighbouring nomad tribes, which necessitated the search for a quiet and settled frontier. The excuse will still serve her. Between Merv and Herat there remains the Sarik Turcomans and two tribes of Afghans, the Djemshidi and the Hazare, who will in due course be made to afford the ready apology from creeping up with gradual steps until the Cossack finds himself within easy bounding distance of the gates of Herat.—Times of India.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MARCH 25, 1884.

OUR PROTECTIONIST GOVERNMENT, AND THE SILVER DUTIES.

THE deputation from the East India Association has waited on Mr. Childers, in the vain hope of shaming the Gladstone Government out of its disgraceful determination to exclude Indian silver manufactures from the English market by a tariff and regulations that are virtually prohibitive. The benefits of Free Trade are appreciated by Radicals, when they catch the votes of Lancashire producers, and when the only sufferers are the Indian taxpayers—as in the case of the Indian Import Duties. But when Free Trade means a reciprocal benefit, to be conferred on Indian silver craftsmen in the shape of the encouragement of the beautiful Indian art-work in silver—the said Indian craftsmen possessing no votes, and only one or two champions in Parliament—a Radical Government fears lest the sacrifice of a few thousand pounds of English revenue might “injuriously affect Imperial fiscal arrangements!” Such is the contemptible hypocrisy with which the appeals are met, of those who desire to see this exceedingly trifling reciprocity offered by England to India in the name of Free Trade! With a Radical Government, no argument has force that does not rest on voting power; hence, it is vain for the East India Association to point out how valuable are likely to be the effects of this very slight concession, not only on the development of the Indian silver-manufacture, but also on the course of exchange. What does Mr. Childers care if the rupee goes down to sixpence? It is the Indian revenue, not the English, that suffers from the depreciation of silver; and to a Radical, the belief that England and India, as both members of one grand Imperial Federation, ought equally to feel an injury inflicted on either, is a hateful sentiment smacking of Imperialism.

But will Parliament, will the generous British nation, allow India to be thus shamelessly wronged? The British nation is generous at heart, in spite of the apparent prevalence for the last four years of a sordid Radicalism. We earnestly appeal to every Member of Parliament who has any care for the national honour—who has any regard even for national decency—to put down a notice of motion on this subject. There are now nearly twenty members in the House of Commons, who either know something personally of India, or have demonstrated in their public life an intelligent interest in Indian affairs. If each one of these twenty members were to put on the paper some such notice as this:—“Upon the occasion of the introduction of the Budget, to move that the duties on Indian gold and silver plate be abolished;”—we verily believe that the conscience of this wretched Government would at last be roused. Pachydermatous the Ministry undoubtedly is, beyond all precedent. But such a motion as that we suggest, would assuredly pierce the official hide; for it would draw the attention of the country at large to the hypocrisy of Radical professions, and to the flimsy nature of the excuses by which Mr. Gladstone's Ministry justifies its neglect of Indian interests.

INDIA, EGYPT, AND THE RUSSIAN ADVANCE.

THE letter that appears in Monday's Times from Mr. Egmont Hake—whose name will carry just weight in India, as in England—must render it impossible for Mr. Gladstone's Government to descend to the infamy of handing over Khartoum, and the key of the slave trade of the Soudan, to that prince of slave-drivers, Zebehr Pasha. It is sufficient humiliation for us as a nation, that such a proposition should have been entertained for a moment; but the fact is of a piece with the other disgraceful incidents which have marked the miserable weakness and vacillation of the Ministry throughout this Soudanese muddle. It is galling for Englishmen to be told by the Bombay Native Opinion that General Gordon's slavery proclamation is “a disgusting guarantee,” and “a piece of moral turpitude,” and by the Mahomedan Observer, that all the recent troubles are due “to the vacillating and uncertain policy of the British Government.” But the sting of these observations lies in the fact that there is a certain substratum of truth underlying them; and we believe that patriotic Indians, as well as patriotic Englishmen, look forward with pleasure to that change of Government which alone is likely to lead to such a change of policy, as will enable the loyal subjects of Her Majesty to look with satisfaction on the situation in Africa.

We have always maintained, and shall continue to maintain, that the Queen of England and Empress of India has no more loyal subjects than the bulk of the Indian populations. In this respect, no record could possibly be clearer or more honourable than that of the zemindars, and the upper classes generally, of Bengal. And we believe that even the mischief-making policy of Lord Ripon, utterly ruinous and disastrous as its effects have been on a small section of the population, has not been able materially to affect the loyalty of any beyond that small and insignificant section. Unhappily, however, the worst effects of Lord Ripon's frenzied attempts to gain popularity for himself at the expense of his countrymen and of the Empire, have shown themselves among some of the ablest and most promising members of that important class known as, "Young Bengal." To this fact alone, we believe, is due that deplorable attitude of a portion of the native press towards English difficulties in the Soudan, and towards the Russian advance on Merv, to which the Calcutta correspondent of the Times draws attention this week. But the significance of that attitude is very grave indeed, and sufficient in itself to condemn Lord Ripon's incendiary policy.

On the Russian advance to Merv we are told that "the more rabid native newspapers, assuming the rôle of a candid friend, have taken upon themselves to lecture England on her duty to India, and on the necessity of making concessions to the people, so as to secure their friendship and assistance, now that Russia is at her gates." And we learn further that the native press generally expresses great satisfaction "at the resolution of the Government not to employ Indian troops in the Soudan." What a contrast is all this to that outburst of ardent Imperial loyalty, with which was received, in every province and every district of India, the news that Lord Beaconsfield and Lord Lytton had determined to send our gallant Indian troops to Malta, with the view of giving them the opportunity of fighting shoulder-to-shoulder with their English comrades against the Russian enemy! We verily believe that there was hardly a native paper in India, whether printed in English or in the Vernacular, that did not express on that memorable occasion, not merely satisfaction, but patriotic ardour and national pride in the expedition. But now, alas! after nearly four years of Lord Ripon's pernicious influence, we find Mr. Ilbert's warmest supporter in the Native Press declaring that "the English are in Egypt ostensibly for the benefit of the Egyptian people, but really for the benefit of the foreign bondholders, whose demands have converted Egypt into a veritable desert." And to this, the Bombay Native Opinion sneeringly adds that "the charm of British success lies not so much in its guns as in its gold." These phrases betray a spirit that is anything but patriotic; and it is noteworthy that they are used by the very papers that have been loudest in their praises of Lord Ripon personally, and in their demands for an extension of Lord Ripon's viceroyalty.

Very different, it is almost needless to say, is the tone of those leaders of Native public opinion who have never bowed the knee to the Radical Baal. The Hindoo Patriot has been the most powerful supporter of Lord Ripon's "Ilbert Bill" policy; and that support, undoubtedly founded on national and patriotic feeling, has been given in a way that has commanded the respect even of those who considered it mistaken—and has been worth more to Lord Ripon's Government than that of a score of ignorant or scurrilous journalistic sycophants. And the Patriot now discusses the troubles in the Soudan in precisely the same spirit as that in which they would be discussed by any high-class journal in London; and with precisely the same feelings of patriotism.

Fort Maekeson will in future be inspected by the General Officer commanding the Peshawur District, and Fort Abazai by the Brigadier General commanding the Punjab Frontier Force. Abazai is garrisoned by the Corps of Guides, and there is only an open country between it and Mardan; whereas the Indus with its numerous branches and the Swat River runs between Abazai and Peshawur.

INDIA IN PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

In reply to Mr. Leamy, Mr. J. K. Cross said: The officers of the Indian Medical Service are subject to the same transport and travelling regulations as the rest of the army. Under those regulations, if an officer is ordered to another station to perform the duties of any temporary staff or other appointment and is pecuniarily benefitted by such transfer, he is required to pay his own travelling expenses but not otherwise. It is not proposed to suggest to the Government of India to alter their travelling regulations.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

SALT-TAX.

In reply to Mr. Burt and Mr. O'Donnell, Mr. J. K. Cross said: If the price of salt at Chingleput is only three annas per maund, a duty of two rupees would have to be paid on three annas' worth of salt. This taxation certainly exists throughout India, and in some parts, far from railway communication, the cost of carriage is, no doubt, equal to both first cost and duty. Petitions could be sent, if necessary, to the Secretary of State.

MR. GRANT DUFF.

Mr. BIGGAR asked the Under Secretary for India whether it was true, as reported in the leading European journal in India, the Pioneer, and extensively copied into other Indian papers, that Mr. Grant Duff had spent 40,000 rupees on silk hangings for Government House, Ootacamund, and had passed the item through the public accounts under the heading of "repairs."

Mr. J. K. Cross—When Mr. Grant Duff arrived in Madras he found that the Government House at Ootacamund, which had been begun some years before he left England, required to be finished and furnished. The amount sanctioned by the Government of India for furniture was Rs.1,25,000; but we have no details of the particular items on which this sum has been expended. There has been no expenditure on repairs.

Mr. J. COWEN—Was not this the house which Mr. Grant Duff used to studiously denounce? (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Cross—The house has been denounced several times in this House.

THE MAHARAJAH OF KOLAPORE.

In reply to Mr. O'Donnell, Mr. Cross said: Full particulars of the circumstances connected with the death of the Maharajah of Kholapore have been received from the Government of Bombay, and have been considered by the Secretary of State in Council. The Maharajah having in 1881 become hopelessly insane, it was deemed advisable, in the interest of his health, to remove him from Kolapore to Ahmednuggur, where he was placed in charge of his former guardian, Mr. Birch, assisted by Private Green, who had already shown himself a careful, kindly, and judicious attendant, and a suitable number of servants. On the 25th of December, the Maharajah, who had been subject to occasional fits of violence, assaulted Green, who without using unnecessary force endeavoured to get him into a chair. His Highness resisted, and fell, and shortly afterwards died. The opinion arrived at by the Bombay Government, that the fatal result was entirely due to the diseased state of the Maharajah's spleen, and that no blame could be attached to the attendant, was based upon the result of a post-mortem examination. A careful inquiry was held before the district magistrate, and a jury of native gentlemen of different castes, selected in view both of their position and intelligence, reported that the death was accidental, and that the evidence showed the Maharajah to have been well treated by the persons, both European and native, who attended upon him.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

In answer to Mr. Gorst, Mr. Cross said he was not aware that there was any intention on the part of the Government of India to appoint a Commission of Inquiry as to the Bengal Tenancy Bill.

FLOGGING STUDENTS IN INDIA.

Mr. O'DONNELL asked the Under Secretary for India whether his attention had been called to a recent sentence of public flogging inflicted upon certain students of a high school at Dacca, on the charge of being concerned in a brawl or disturbance with the police; and whether these youths belonged to some of the most respectable families of Dacca and the neighbourhood.

Mr. J. K. Cross—The Secretary of State's attention has been called to certain Indian newspapers, from which it appears that three boys, seemingly students of the Dacca Collegiate School, were convicted on different charges of assault and sentenced to be whipped. In two, if not in all, of the cases the whipping was to be by way of "school discipline." There is no information in the India Office as to the family or respectability of the boys thus punished. (Hear, hear.) The case is receiving attention. (Hear, hear.)

THE SALT TAX IN INDIA.

In answer to Mr. O'Donnell, Mr. J. K. Cross said,—I have read the address of the people of Bellary petitioning for an alleviation of the salt tax, as reported in the Madras Weekly Mail, but I have not seen that of the people of North Arcot on the same subject. The Government of India do not send home returns of all petitions giving expression to native grievances with respect to the salt tax, nor can I state the number of such petitions presented to the British authorities during the past year. (Hear, hear.)

THE INSTITUTION OF CIVIL ENGINEERS.

At the ordinary meeting on Tuesday, the 18th of March, Sir J. W. Bazalgette, C.B., president, in the chair, the paper read was on "Wire-Gun Construction," by Mr. James A. Longridge, M. Inst. C.E. Before entering on the specific subject of the paper, the author referred to a number of documents received by the institution from the Ordnance Department, U.S.A. These were mostly translations from the works of Virgile, Rosset, and Clavarino, and related entirely to the Hoop-Construction of Guns. The conclusions and formulas arrived at by these authorities completely bore out those of the author's paper of 1860, and the fundamental formulas agreed with those derived by Lamé, Hart, and Rankine. The formulas, however, required modification in certain circumstances, when account was taken of the action of lateral forces, whether of tension or of compression. In guns constructed on the author's principle there was no strain on the core or coil in the direction of the axis of the gun, so that only the radial compression-force had to be considered. It was shown that in no case was this very important, and that its effect vanished when the modulus of elasticity of the material of the gun was the same throughout. Virgile came to the conclusion that no part of the gun should be strained beyond its elastic limits, whether in tension or compression. Whilst agreeing with this as regarded tension, the author came to a different conclusion as regarded compression. This, from his own experience, might be largely exceeded without detriment, and in this he agreed with Clavarino, who expressed the opinion, fully confirmed by experiment, that a compression of three times the elastic limit was perfectly admissible. Both Virgile and Clavarino attached great importance to the proper determination of the shrinkages, in this respect agreeing with the author, who had always contended that Sir William Armstrong and the Woolwich authorities were wrong in assuming that if the actual shrinkages were in excess of those indicated by theory, the gun would shake itself right by repeated firing. This view the author contested; he pointed out that it would only be true if the excess strain caused a permanent set just equal to the original excess shrinkage; that it often happened that the permanent set was greatly in excess of this, and in such case the gun was reduced to the condition of deficient shrinkage, and it might be of no shrinkage, and would then inevitably fail. The author next referred to the failure of a 6.3-inch gun on board H.M.S. "Daring" on the 22nd of February, 1883, resulting in the death of two men and the wounding of three others during target practice. From calculations made by him, the author concluded that the failure of this class of gun was certain, if the powder-pressure was not kept down to about ten tons per square inch, the effect of which on the efficiency of the gun need not be stated. He thought it probable that, owing to the method of construction, this gun did not actually burst, but was torn asunder by the successive permanent sets loosening the hold of the hoops upon each other between the breech and the trunnion. After referring to Rosset's experiments on "Special Elasticity," or the extension of the "Elastic Limit" by stretching, the author pointed out that inasmuch as this only took place when the stretching was the effect of mechanical force, and not when it resulted from contraction in cooling, this property was not available in the ordinary method of gun-construction, though it had some effect on the behaviour of a gun under fire. After careful consideration the author was forced to the conclusion that the construction of a perfect hooped-gun was beset with enormous practical difficulties, and that the present armament of the country was unreliable. Turning to wire-guns the author remarked that there was a good deal of misconception on the subject. It was not that a material in the form of wire was much stronger than the same material in mass, and that the method of coiling it on was expeditious and convenient. This was true; but the essential feature of wire-gun construction consisted in the facility it afforded of bringing the body of the gun into the proper state of varied initial tension, in order that, when the powder-pressure acted, every portion of the coil might be equally strained to a pre-determined tension. Thus the important question was to determine the proper tension with which to lay on the wire. It was maintained by some that the tension should be uniform, and by others that it was sufficient to lay the wire on with just enough strain to ensure close contact. The latter plan had been adopted by Dr. Woodbridge in the 10-inch gun constructed at Frankfort Arsenal, in 1873, for the United States Government. After briefly describing that gun and its mode of construction, the author pointed out the impossibility of its proving a success, being wrong both in principle and in practice. The author then proceeded to enunciate the problem, and to enumerate the variables on which it depended. By a series of diagrams he showed that by a proper formula it was possible to determine the exact lying-on tension of each coil of wire, so that when the powder pressure acted, every wire should be uniformly strained to the allowed limit, which should always be kept well within the elastic limit of the wire. The diagrams also demonstrated the strains both of the coil and of the core when under fire and when at rest. There were three sets of these diagrams, in the respective cases where the modulus of elasticity of the core was 4,500 tons, 9,000 tons, and 22,000 tons, that of the wire being 22,000 tons throughout; and they showed clearly the great advantage of a core of low modulus. In the next section the author dealt with the case of laying-on the wire with uniform instead of varying tension, and by a series of diagrams he showed how very important it was to determine the proper amount of this tension if uniform. He also showed that for each individual gun there was one "particular" tension of laying-on which gave the best result, and that this particular tension might be found by the formulas. The formulas and diagrams also demonstrated the condition of the respective guns when under fire and when at rest. A further set of diagrams showed the serious error that had been made in Captain Schultz's, 34-centimetre gun, if the account of its construction in the United States Ordnance Reports was correct: Clavarino's hypothesis, that the strength of a gun was measured by the "extension" and not by the "tension" of the material, was shown to be ill-grounded. Proceeding to the objections which had been made to wire-guns, namely, want of longitudinal strength, derangement of tensions by heating, and crushing the core by the compressive action of the coil, the author pointed out that such objections had no validity, provided the gun was constructed properly. The next section of the paper was devoted to a brief examination of the practice of "chambering." This was maintained to be only a device for reducing the initial pressure of the powder gases to such an extent, that it would not overcome the inherent weakness of the guns of the present day. A comparison was made of two 13-inch guns, one with a large chamber, the other unchambered, and it was shown that whilst the two guns were equally strained by the explosion, the chamber gun, with 500lb. of powder imparted about 19,000 foot-tons of energy to the projectile; the unchambered gun, with 413lb., gave nearly 30,000 foot-tons. Some remarks were then made upon slow-burning powder, and it was maintained that it was a retrograde step as regarded ballistic effect, and was only called for by the weakness of the gun. The principal inferences drawn from the investigations on which the paper had been found were three:—First, the paramount importance of a proper formula for the laying-on tension of the wire. Second, the advantage of a core of material of a low modulus of elasticity, such as cast-iron. Third, the advantage of a thin core. In an appendix were given the principal formulas for the construction and the calculation of the strength of these guns, and a few examples of their application.

NATIONAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—The Directors have pleasure in presenting to the fifty-fourth annual general court of the National Life Assurance Society, the usual yearly statements made up to December 31, 1883, in accordance with the provisions of the "Assurance Companies Act, 1870." It will be seen from the Revenue Account that the claims have been heavy; the policies on which they have arisen, were, however, for the most part, of old standing; and it is only in Class A. that the actual claims have exceeded the expectation. In Classes B. and C. they have been considerably within the expected amount. The claims in Class A. were, indeed, £35,000 more in 1883 than in 1882; but the total payments under this head for the three years which have elapsed since the last division of profit, have nevertheless been only £600 in excess of the expectation; the mortality in the two previous years having been very favourable. The new assurances effected in 1883 were somewhat less than those in the previous year; and this fact, taken in conjunction with an unusually large number of lapsed policies, has reduced the premium income for 1883 by £1,600, as compared with that of the previous year. Taking into account the allowance of £22,082 applied during the past year in reduction of premiums, the assurance fund is thus less, by £15,633, than the amount at which it stood on Dec. 31, 1882. That fund, however, still stands higher by £31,054, than at the end of 1881, while the liability has materially decreased on account of a large number of policies having lapsed. The funds of the society, as invested on Dec. 31, 1883, were yielding interest at the average rate of £4 14s. 9d per cent. per annum. The directors have reason to believe that the recent alterations in the rules and practice of the society have been very cordially approved, especially that by which, while the fullest security was provided, the unlimited liability of individual members was abolished; and that by which claims are now payable in thirty days, instead of three months, after admission of the proof of death. In the new prospectus, the members will doubtless have observed statements with reference to the moderate fixed rates of premium for military and naval officers, covering every risk incidental to the exercise of their profession, in peace or war, in any part of the world, as well as to the arrangements for trust policies under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882; and to the option of taking annuities instead of the sums assured, given under Table 3. The directors desire to recommend these schemes to the careful consideration of the members and the public, believing that they offer great advantages to assurers. The directors retiring from office on the present occasion are George Burnand, Esq., the Hon. Gerald O. Talbot, and Sir Henry W. Tyler; and the retiring auditor is Lewis G. Berger, Esq. These gentlemen offer themselves for re-election. It is with great regret that the directors have announced the resignation by Mr. Lock of the seat at the board which he has held during the last thirteen years; the state of his health precluding the hope of his again taking an active part in their deliberations. The vacancy so caused will be filled up at the annual general court, to be held on the 2nd of April. Under the new rule the next valuation for the division of profit will be made either at the end of 1884 or 1885, at the discretion of the court of directors. In either case, the profit will be applied in and after the year 1886. The directors look forward with confidence to a result from that valuation which will be thoroughly satisfactory to the members of the society in every class; and they trust that their own constant efforts to promote the well-being of the society, and to extend its sphere of usefulness will be heartily supported by all who are interested in its proceedings.

BURMA: A TIMELY DISCOURSE.

WITH

THE FRENCH IN TONQUIN SEEKING TO WIN AN EMPIRE IN THE EAST.

By the Author of 'Our Burmese Wars and Relations with Burma,' 'Ashé Pyee,' &c.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"The present volume gathers up many significant points of description, of politics, of commerce—which, in view of the manifest bearing that recent (and present) events in Tonquin have upon Burma and Indo-China generally, and our direct and indirect relations therewith, are of very timely utility. Perhaps, in one sense, no better short account of Burma and the Burmese at present exists."
Homeward Mail.

"The Author of 'Ashé Pyee' once more urges British statesmen to be watchful concerning everything that happens in, and adjacent to Burma. The subject is very carefully and thoughtfully dealt with."
Morning Chronicle.

JAPAN:TRAVELS AND RESEARCHES

Undertaken at the Cost of the Prussian Government.

By Prof. J. J. REIN,
 Of The University of Marburg.

The Times.—"Dr. Rein is an accomplished geographer, and is evidently, besides, a scholar of trained powers and untiring industry. The whole work is compiled on a carefully considered plan, and much of it is really interesting reading. As a compendious reference book it is at present without a rival."

Nature.—"It is the best of the many publications upon the subject that have appeared in the last ten years."

Daily News.—"This remarkable work has already taken in Germany a high position as a comprehensive study of the whole field of Japanese civilisation, and of the country itself."

Sheffield Independent.—"The reader will be amazed at the immense and accurate amount of knowledge he has brought to the accomplishment of his task. The Japanese Government assisted him in the promotion of his undertaking. This remarkable book deserves very careful study, which it makes easy by its splendidly executed maps and photographs and the lucid style of the accomplished author."

A RIDE TO KHIVA

BY CAPTAIN FRED BURNABY,
 Royal Horse Guards.

Says page 13:—"Two pairs of boots lined with fur were also taken; and for physic—with which it is as well to be supplied when travelling in out-of-the-way places—some quinine and Cockle's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the natives of Central Africa with the greatest possible success. In fact, the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him five will never fade from my memory; and a friend of mine, who passed through the same district many months afterwards, informed me that my fame as a 'medicine man' had not died out, but that the marvellous cure was even then a theme of conversation in the bazaar."

FIFTY-SEVEN.SOME ACCOUNT OF THE ADMINISTRATION OF INDIAN DISTRICTS

By

HENRY GEORGE KEENE, C.I.E., M.R.A.S.,

Author of "The Fall of the Mughal Empire," &c.

"The author breaks new ground. He essays to inform us how the different districts in the North West were preserved from anarchy by their civil administrators during such a stupendous catastrophe as the revolt of the army, upon whose support social order, in a great measure, rested. The task involves stories of adventure and pluck, which never come amiss to the many readers who have relatives serving abroad; and these stories are given in picturesque language, with a conciseness precluding tedium, and in a tone throughout of the modesty which seems natural where duty is considered the first obligation, and courage the first attribute, of an English gentleman."—World."Mr. Keene tells how the civil officers in the districts kept or restored order, largely by their own individual influence, often by heroic exertion, and almost invariably with the loyal aid of native subordinates. He describes the events which occurred in some eight or nine districts of the North West Provinces and Bengal. His narrative is unpretension in style, but it clearly shows that courage, firmness, heroism, and self-sacrifice were displayed among the members of the Indian Civil Service, as well as by the soldiers who stormed Delhi, relieved Lucknow, and avenged the crimes of Cawnpore."—Scotsman."This work claims our hearty recognition of its thoroughness. It gives us a most readable and trustworthy recension of the reports of eye-witnesses, always the most valuable to the student of history. It has a special interest from the fact that Mr. Keene was himself one of those district officers who honourably held their ground during those fearfully exciting times."—Literary World."Mr. Keene writes to give somewhat tardy honour where it is due—viz., to the civilian officers who, during the period of the Indian Mutiny, remained at their posts, and in many instances deprived of military aid, had themselves to raise and command levies for the protection of the district."—Morning Post."A volume which seems to us to break new ground, and to supply a want felt by those who have ever endeavoured to study the subject. . . . The matter is, for the most part, new, and it treats of incidents in themselves fairly entitled to attention, and calculated to excite interest. . . . The fights, the rides, and the surprises, and the escapes are all related in picturesque language."—Home News.

W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing pure diamonds and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S

CHLORODYNE

COLD,
ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying alimation), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Free man was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

DIARRHOEA, DYSENTERY.
GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH,
London, REPORT that it ACTS as a
CHARM, one dose generally sufficient.
Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHOEA."
From Symes & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 3, 1880.
To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we must question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their solace there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhoea and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhoea, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, SGT. Russell St., W.C.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA.
We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE IS THE TRUE
PALLIATIVE IN
TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN OF EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep, WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,
PALPITATION, Hysteria.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSUBSTANTIAL IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d.

PERSONAL REMINISCENCES OF GENERAL SKOBELEFF.

By

V. I. WENIKOVITCH-DAUTCHENKO.

TRANSLATED FROM THE RUSSIAN

By

E. A. BRAYLEY HODGETTS.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

St. James's Gazette.—"The new Biography of Skobelev is . . . deeply interesting, and the translator has done well to make it known to the English public."

Contemporary Review.—"It is most interesting, as well as . . . instructive throughout."

Graphic.—"The subject is of abounding interest. . . Mr. Brayley Hodgetts deserves hearty thanks for bringing such a life so cleverly before the public."

Academy.—"The account of the third battle of Plevna. . . is one of the most stirring pieces of military journalism that we have ever read."

Public Opinion.—"Such will suffice to give us an idea of the 'Reminiscences' of the man who knew no fear, who passed as by a miracle through every danger, and who, had he lived, might have become the greatest soldier of our age. . . The work is, in every respect, thoroughly well got up. . . Too much praise cannot be given to Mr. E. A.
Brayley Hodgetts for the able manner in which he has translated the work into English, and who has succeeded in making it so interesting and readable."

Whitehall Review.—"The Author's peculiarly happy anecdotal style of narration accords perfectly with the eventful career of Skobelev, his brilliant exploits, and his versatile genius."

Spectator.—"The writer correctly estimates his work as. . . merely a collection of fragmentary reminis-cences. . . From these fragments, however, it is easy to see that Skobelev was a real hero of the knight-errant, a fairy-prince kind."

Liverpool Mercury.—"A very remarkably entertaining book has been issued by Messrs. W. H. Allen of Waterloo-place, called 'Personal Reminiscences of General Skobelev.' The author is a romancer."

Scotsman.—"The admiration verging on idolatry with which Russians regard the memory of General Skobelev is forcibly illustrated in this volume. . . Very skillfully translated by E. A. Brayley Hodgetts."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, APRIL 1, 1884.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, March 14; Madras and Allahabad, March 12; Calcutta, March 11.

We are glad to learn that Bombay is at last to be provided with a new hotel on the magnificent scale to which European travellers have grown accustomed during the last few years.

The history of Lord Ripon's attack on the agricultural interest of Bengal enters on a new phase with the publication of the Bill, as amended in Select Committee, and the very remarkable dissent recorded by the Hon. Kristodas Pal. We deal with the subject in our leading columns.

MR. GLADSTONE'S Government appears to be hopelessly ignorant of the circumstances which led up to, and attended, the annexation of Merv by the Russians. Like the ostrich that hides its head in the sand on the approach of danger, our present rulers are steadfastly determined to know nothing of anything that goes on in Central Asia, beyond Peshawar on the one side and Meshed on the other; and it is probable that Lord Edmund Fitzmaurice and Mr. J. K. Cross often get the credit of fencing cleverly with questions on events happening in these regions, when the truth is they have no more trustworthy knowledge than that derived from Teheran gossip or St. Petersburg journals.

THAT the annexation has not been carried out without bloodshed is clear; and there is very little doubt that the story of the official Russian Press about the happy and contented submission of the Merv Turcomans was simply a figment of the Cossack imagination. This is what the official communiqué—sent now to the Times nearly a month after the event—has to say about it:—

"Official information has been received that when the Russian force sent at the end of February to occupy Merv reached the vicinity of that place, a hostile encounter ensued between it and some of the Turcomans. The action occurred on the 21st ultimo, but all the details are not yet known. It seems, however, that those of the Turcomans who were opposed to accepting the authority of Russia, and who comprised the whole of the band of the late Makdum Kuli, were not as demonstrative in their reception of the Russian officers as the latter thought they ought to be. Whereupon the Russian representatives resorted to force in order to exact respect and future obedience as well as to chastise their opponents; but the Turcomans retaliated in kind, and a sort of irregular engagement followed. While this event shows that there is still a party among the Turcomans opposed to Russia, its chief importance is that it will induce Russia to station a very much larger garrison on the Murgab than she might otherwise have done."

"A very much larger garrison on the Murgab than she might otherwise have done!" Can Radical imbecility go further than this feeble stuff? Does our Radical Government suppose that Russia would not promptly create an inducement, if it were not already provided for her, to station a "very much larger garrison" on the Murgab than any that could possibly accord with Radical follies about Russia's civilising mission? And is there not already ample inducement in the mere facts that a Radical Government is in power in England and Radical bungling going on in the Soudan?

The threatened scarcity in various parts of India would have been a famine; but for railways that already exist. And yet, Lord Ripon is determined to suspend all railway extension until Mr. Baxter's Parliamentary Select Committee shall have reported! And Mr. Baxter will give to the great question of railway extension all that portion of his great mind which can be spared from the disestablishment of the Indian chaplains and the relative rank of Privy Counsellors in India.

CIRCUMSTANCES have proved too strong for the Gladstone Government, in the matter of Contagious Diseases as in most other things. What will the anti-vaccinationists say, when they hear that a compulsory Vaccination Act has been passed in hot haste by Mr. Grant Duff—et tu Brute?—in Madras, and that Lord Ripon's assent has actually been obtained by telegram? That is the sort of thing that always happens, sooner or later, when Radicals are brought face to face with facts. It is almost as good as Mr. Arthur Pease, and the other members of the Committee of the Peace Society in the House of Commons, voting approval of the butchery that has been going on in the Soudan.

The Bombay folk have done wisely in putting off their exhibition to the cold weather of 1885-86. With a year and a half given for the preparation for it, it ought to prove a great success.

We have not referred in these columns to the lamentable split in the ranks of the Brahmo Somaj, that has followed on the death of their late revered Minister, Keshub Ghunder Sen—for we sincerely hope that the differences which have caused it may prove to be temporary only. The Brahmo Somaj of India has a great and noble work before it, the accomplishment of which will require not only zeal and ability, but also unity and self-abnegation. We earnestly call upon our brothers in Calcutta to allow the spirit of religion and patriotism to prevail over all minor considerations—to yield somewhat on both sides, for the sake of peace and progress.

It is proposed to hold the Calcutta University examinations in the months of April and May, instead of November and December. This radical change, says the Pioneer, has been finally decided upon, and therefore, no examinations at all will be held by the Calcutta University at the end of the present year, but they will be postponed some five or six months. The first effect of this will be completely to disturb the vacations as at present given, the Christmas vacation being practically abolished, and a long vacation substituted in the hot weather months, after the manner of the Oxford and Cambridge Universities.

THE Hindoo Patriot has the following in regard to the current changes in the personnel of the Bengal Government:—

"There will be some changes in some rounds of the official ladder owing to the usual applications for hot weather leave. Mr. H. J. Reynolds takes three months' leave and will return in time to relieve Mr. Dampier, who retires in July next. Mr. Macaulay takes leave for three months, Mr. C. E. Buckland acts for him, and Mr. Bolton succeeds Mr. Buckland at the board—both the appointments are excellent. Mr. Buckland as Private Secretary to Sir Richard Temple had peculiar opportunities and facilities to study all the provinces of the Lieutenant Governorship, and the knowledge thus acquired, and the talents and abilities possessed by Mr. Buckland cannot find a better field than the Secretariat. Mr. Harrison contemplates to take leave for three months. We have not heard who will act for him."

THE Indian Daily News says:—"We hear that a despatch has been sent to the Secretary of State dealing very fully with the questions which have arisen recently at Hyderabad. It will be a satisfaction to the public to know that the Government of India has exonerated Major Trevor from the imputations brought against him; and that Mr. Cordery and Major Trevor possess the confidence of the Government."

A DEPUTATION from the Madras Branch of the National Mahomedan Association waited upon His Highness the Nizam at the Hyderabad Palace on February 13, when an address engrossed on parchment with gold borders, was presented to His Highness in a silver casket made by Messrs. P. Orr and Sons, of Madras, bearing an inscription which ran thus:—

"Presented to His Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad, Deccan, by the members of the National Mahomedan Association, Madras Branch, on the occasion of His Highness's installation, Feb. 5, 1884."

In his reply to the address the Nizam said :—

"I am glad to understand that it is the aim and object of your Society to improve the moral and social condition of the Mahomedans. If you wish for success, it should always be your endeavour to deserve the sympathy of your own Government, which is ever ready to foster and encourage every earnest and well-directed efforts. You may also rest assured of my sympathy and support."

We take the following on the Calcutta Indigo Market from Messrs. W. Moran and Co.'s weekly report :—

"Since our last issue sowings have been generally completed in Behar. The weather was all that could be desired for about a fortnight, and then changed, becoming cloudy with every appearance of rain, which would have done much harm. Fortunately, however, the stormy weather passed over with only a fall of a few tenths here and there, and which will make it necessary to redrill some portions of the cultivation. Another fortnight of fine weather is necessary to secure the sowings, and the rain will be acceptable. In Lower Bengal generally rain is much wanted."

The same firm gives the following on the Calcutta Tea Market :—

"On Thursday last the 6th instant, 3,802 chests were offered, and 3,585 sold. The few desirable teas met with good competition at previous rates, while those without character and common Brokenes were about half an anna lower."

The Times of India gives the following obituary for the week ending March 14 :—

"Colonel Charles Vanrenen Conway-Gordon, Hyderabad Contingent; Mr. E. Dampier, Madras Forest Department; Lieutenant Colonel R. Beadon."

The Englishman gives the following on the Calcutta Freight Market for the week ending March 11 :—

"At the commencement of the past week we had a moderate inquiry for steam tonnage, but this has died away, and the market looks anything but strong, especially as we are shortly expecting several outsiders who have failed to obtain employment elsewhere. So far the demand has been entirely confined to seed tonnage. Wheat, our principal item of export, is literally a dead letter, and the news of the very large stocks at home will, no doubt, check exports from here for some time to come. Sailing vessels have been quite neglected, and we fear their prospects do not appear very brilliant; only one has obtained employment during the week, leaving our unfixed tonnage about 42,000 tons."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

The following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times dated March 30 :—

"The preliminary report of the Select Committee on the Bengal Tenancy Bill and the Bill as revised by the Committee were published yesterday in the official Gazette. The Committee begin by stating that they have recast the Bill and embodied such alterations as have commended themselves to the majority of the members, but that there are various points in which they consider further information requisite, and they recommend that the Bill as altered should be republished for further criticism in the interval that will elapse before they resume their labours in November. Then, after stating that the report must be taken as representing the views not of the entire Committee, but only of the majority, they proceed to discuss the various alterations in detail and at considerable length.

"The revised Bill differs in many respects from the original draft, but the fact that the representatives of the landholding interest dissent from the report shows that it is not likely to be more popular with that section of the community than was the measure introduced last year. Seven of the eleven members of the Committee—namely, the Lieutenant Governor, Sir S. Bayley, Mr. Ilbert, Mr. Evans, Mr. Quinton, Ameer Ali, and Dr. Hunter—sign the report without remark; two others, Mr. Gibbon and Mr. Reynolds, sign subject to reservation on some point, and each appends a short memorandum of his reservations. Kristodas Pal states that he signs the report as a fair statement of the results of the deliberations of the Committee, but that being opposed to the leading principles of the Bill and many of the details he records a separate dissent. The Maharajah of Durbunga declares himself opposed to the principles of the Bill in toto, he signs the report subject to the conditions mentioned by Kristodas Pal and only because he believes the rules of Council require him to sign it. He, too, states his intention of recording a separate dissent, but that dissent is not yet published.

"The shortest dissenting minute is that of Mr. Reynolds, whose objection to the revised Bill is confined to some provisions which he thinks unduly favourable to landlords. Mr. Gibbon dissents on several points of detail, such as the distinction made between occupancy tenants holding at fixed rents and ordinary occupancy tenants, the restrictions on subletting, provisions regarding enhancement of rent, and so on. His views may be taken to generally represent those of the Behar indigo planters, a body whose interests, while not quite identical with those of either of the two great classes mainly affected by the Bill, are yet more nearly allied to the interests of the ryots than of the zemindars. The most important dissent yet published is unquestionably that of Kristodas Pal. He begins by protesting against the hurried way in which the committee worked. At first it met twice in a week, and members were required to give forty-eight hours' notice of amendments, but from January 26, owing to the approach of the Simla season and the amount of work remaining unfinished, the committee resolved to meet thrice weekly, sitting from 2 to 5-30, and notices of amendments were not circulated till the morning of the day on which they were to be moved. This arrangement caused grave inconvenience to members, leaving them, as it did, scant time for the preparation and study of amendments, and practically forcing non-official members to give up their whole time to the work to the neglect of their own professional duties.

"He then goes on to state that the cardinal principles of the Bill remain unchanged, but in some respects it puts the zemindars in even a worse position than did the original measure, and that, while on some minor points even-handed justice is done to both zemindars and ryots, the only gainer will be the middleman, and the bona fide cultivator will be worse off than at present. He next discusses the various provisions at great length, and states that his objections to the Bill are based on these grounds :—First, because it is opposed to the ancient landlaw of the country; secondly, because it assumes a construction of the law which is contrary to the judicial decision as to facts and evidence; thirdly, because it does not fulfil the primary object for which it was brought in, namely, the simplification of the procedure for the recovery of rent; fourthly, because it is calculated to sow dissension between landlord and tenant and flood the land with litigation; fifthly, because it will tend to reduce a large proportion of the cultivating ryots to the position of day labourers; and, sixthly, because by abolishing freedom of contract it will neutralise the vital principle of self-reliance in the agricultural population.

"The partial failure last autumn of the crops is now beginning to make itself felt in various parts of India. Among the districts most seriously affected is that of Gurgaon. In the Punjab, fortunately, the new Rewari Ferozepore Railway affords a ready means of sending succour; and as grain is being poured in in large quantities, there is no danger of actual famine. There is likely, however, to be a heavy loss of cattle from want of fodder. There is also some pressure from scarcity in certain Bengal districts, but they are all within easy reach of more favoured tracts, which can supply them from their own surplus.

The Lieutenant Governor returned on Thursday from a short visit to Chittagong. During his stay there his attention was called to a number of requirements of that rising port, to all of which he promised to give attention. The principal of these is the early construction of a railway connecting Chittagong with the Eastern Bengal districts. That work undertaken and completed, the little seaport cannot fail to have a brilliant future.

"At a meeting held in Bombay last week it was resolved that it was desirable to hold an International Exhibition in Bombay during the winter of 1885-86, and that a special sub-committee be appointed to report on the feasibility of the scheme. It is understood that Government will be prepared to guarantee not less than one-fourth of the amount required.

"The epidemic of small-pox continues to rage with great violence at Madras. For some time past the weekly mortality returns of that city have shown a death-rate from small-pox and other causes of about eighty-five per 1,000 per annum. At a meeting of the Madras Corporation, held on Wednesday, the President read a note describing the present epidemic and the difficulties of coping with it. The chief of these is the widespread superstition among Hindoos that small-pox is a goddess whose visits should not be interfered with in any way. The mortality is mainly among unvaccinated children. An act making vaccination compulsory has been passed by the local Council, and the Viceroy's assent obtained by telegraph. It is hoped it may have the effect of checking the disease. The present year seems characterised by an exceptional development of small-pox throughout India. The disease is epidemic and is causing great mortality in Rangoon and also in several cities of Upper India. It is described as above the average in Calcutta, and appears to prevail to a greater or less extent in almost every large city in the country.

"Colonel Sir Oliver St. John has been appointed to act as Resident at Hyderabad during Mr. Cordery's absence on leave.

"According to the latest news, the Burmese troops have been generally successful against the Kachyen rebels, and the country near Bhamo is being restored to order."

SELECTED ARTICLES.

INDIAN YOUTHS AND TECHNICAL EDUCATION.

(Indian Mirror.)

WE read the following interesting item of news in a Bombay paper:—

"Bhaskur Venayak Rajwade, who was taught English in St. Mary's Jesuit College in Bombay, is studying glass-making in Clayton, Gloucester county, N. J. He is one of a number of young men of education whom an association of gentlemen in Bombay have sent to America to study the manufacture of paper, matches, morocco leather, and calico dyeing and printing. To a reporter for the Philadelphia Record, he said, 'I was selected to master the art of glass-making, because I had passed first in a competitive examination of students in St. Mary's College. I have studied chemistry for years, and much of what I have learned I depend upon to aid me in my present undertaking. There is not a glass factory in India, and all the window glass, bottles, and glass-ware must be imported. The raw material is there, and the soda ash can be imported from England. My friends have a patriotic desire to establish such industries as they can in their native land, and they have plenty of money to back such enterprises. If we succeed, there will be many young men sent to America to learn the arts so well known here for the purpose of introducing them in India.' Rajwade arrived in New York in September last, and was for a time a student in the Worcester Institute of Technology. He went thence to Moore Brothers glass factory, in Clayton, N. J. He began by taking his place in the clay house, and has not shirked any of the disagreeable duties of an apprentice.

The example set by Mr. Bhaskar Venayak Rajwade and his associates from Bombay, should be extensively followed by Indian youths from other parts of the Empire.

INDIAN LYRICS.*

(Indian Mirror.)

AMIDST the blaze of furious political writings, in which the present time is enveloped, it is a genuine relief to come across a work, where gentler passions are invoked. Mr. Webb of the Education Department has profitably employed his leisure hours in wooing the Muse, and has brought out a work, giving sketches of Indian characters, akin to those given by the famous "Ala Baba" of the modern days—only less vigorous and more kindly in style and spirit than the work just named. The book under notice is divided into (1) Sonnets on "Indian Servants," "Ourselves and Others," and "Miscellaneous;" (2) Lyrical Pieces, (3) Rhymes of the "P. and O.," and (4) French Forms of Verse. The poet has run over a vast and varied range of subjects, to which he has done, considering the manner in which he has handled them, pretty good justice. The "punkha-puller" seems to have been the poet's favourite theme, for we notice that this useful, though at times annoying, individual has been honoured in the sonnets, twice in the lyrics, and once again in the French forms of verse. Besides, he has been taken casual notice of in the course of other subjects. The pieces embody a variety of style, mostly of the descriptive kind with didactic deductions here and there. As specimens of the humorous style, we might mention "The Musquito," "The Jackal," and "The Parsi Hat." The pieces headed "The Memorial Wells and Gardens, Cawnpore," "Baby's Grave," and "In Memoriam—the Earl of Mayo, Viceroy of India," contain a good deal of pathos. The sketches coming under the heading of "Ourselves and Others," embrace a variety of characters,—from the Covenanted Civilian down to the European loafer, the Zemindar, the ryot, and that pest of human race—the Bengali Babu—being also honoured with a place therein. In justice to the author, we must also mention the "College Professor" who "expounds selected Johnson," "or, lecturing, stains his hands with chemic smears," "Modern Bengali," as represented by "Chatterjis, Mukerjis, and Bannerjis," comes under the list, under the heading, suitable to these obnoxious characters—"Miscellaneous." "Brahmoism" addressed (now too late) to Keshub Chunder Sen, and Brahminism do not escape the author's Argus eyes. So far for the matter. As for the manner in which the subjects have been treated, we must say that for the most part the descriptions are conceived in a charitable spirit. The style is pretty pleasant, and generally speaking, the verses run smooth and melodious. There is a quaint sweetness in some of the pieces which is quite agreeable to the senses. Others are halting and stiff, and seem to be wanting in nerve and spirit. We are thankful, however, for the literary treat which the perusal of this neat little volume has afforded us, and we sincerely trust, with the author, that the "randomic music" embodied in his songs might

....."Wake
Perchance some note for tired ears,
To sooth a languid hour, or break,
The Indian sameness of the years."

A COMMISSION ON THE RENT BILL.

WE are informed that the Lieutenant Governor desires to appoint a Commission to go through the country and examine into the probable results of the proposed Rent Bill in each district. The news is good news if the scope of the Commission is to examine minutely into the circumstances of each district, to openly record evidence, and to examine those who are interested one way or another—if in fact, it is to be a Commission like the Indigo Commission of 1860. If, on the other hand, its operations are to be confined to hurried visits to headquarter stations, and to consultations with a few persons to be selected by the Commission itself, it is to be feared the results will not be such as to throw light upon the very vexed question which now agitates the country. What we have steadily advocated is a commission of the nature which we are told is about to be appointed; but we have no less strenuously urged that its inquiries should be very minute and searching. The Indigo Commission forms an excellent pattern upon which such a Commission might work. But very little is known, by the great mass of the public, as to the condition of the rural community. On the one hand, we are assured that the ryots are a down-trodden and oppressed race; on the other we are informed that they are the masters, and the landlords the serfs. The truth probably lies between the two statements. The present is a fitting time to examine the question and to base legislation upon that examination. If this be carefully and diligently done, and if every opportunity is given to both sides to show what the real condition of things is, we are confident that the Rent Bill will be so altered that its authors will renounce it as a changeling and no child of theirs. We trust that inquiries will not be confined to officials, nor yet to zemindars, We hope that the ryots themselves, in the hat or in the field, will be questioned. Let them be asked to what use they will put the power of free sale if it be given to them. Let it be elicited who will be the first to pounce down upon these occupancy rights. It is certain what the answer will be—the mahajun, and he alone. The inquiry might be usefully directed into eliciting the fact whether or no advances have been industriously made in anticipation of this Bill becoming law, and what the consequences of free sale will be, both in Bengal and Behar, to the ryot. On the other hand if legislation is to be recast upon the report of this Commission, as it must be, if the Commission is to be for any purpose, there should be an inquiry into the pernicious practice of levying illegal cesses, and let that blot upon our land system be eradicated once and for all. At the same time it will be necessary, in the interests of justice, to examine into the case of the zemindars. The truth, whether it works for or against their cause, should be laid bare. In doing so, it should be shown how far the Legislature is responsible for evils, if evils exist, and how far the proposed legislation will remedy those evils. What is wanted is a fair and impartial inquiry, openly conducted, and with every interest represented. The object of the Commission should not be to fit the shoe when it will not fit, seeing that it is to make its inquiries after a certain measure has been drawn up, and not before it, as it should have been. It should be the object of the Commission to give a hearing, and an open hearing, to examine evidence adduced in favour of the measure no less or no more than that adduced by its opponents. Upon that evidence, if legislation be introduced, there need be no fear of the result. There can be no doubt that the members of any Commission appointed by the Government of Bengal will be alive to the fact that, although it is asserted and argued that legislation on certain lines is the one thing necessary for the salvation of the country, it has been equally and as honestly asserted that the proposed legislation will be mischievous in its results, and will breed nothing but ill will amongst those whose mutual relations are now friendly. The truth which lies between the two contentions is what should be elicited. In his speech on the Bengal Municipalities Bill, Mr. Rivers Thompson told the Council that he had had the advantage of asking every one interested in the subject their opinions regarding the introduction of the elective system. He was able, therefore, to speak with authority as to the popular feeling on the subject. His example should not be thrown away. Patient inquiry, and hearing every side of this vexed question, are absolutely essential to a true conclusion. If this inquiry be made—if a full and open hearing be given to all—there need be no doubt of the result. Legislation, if it be based upon evidence openly taken, ought to assume the form which those would wish who, although they would oppose the Rent Bill as it stands, are in favour of a re-modelling of Act 10. A hurried and perfunctory inquiry will, however, be worse than useless. The agricultural condition of a vast province cannot be laid bare in a few months. Statements have been made on both sides of the question, honestly believed in by those who made them, but as wide apart as the Poles. A commission such as that which is about to be issued should give either side an opportunity of proving the truth of its position by fair and open evidence. In issuing the Commission, the Government has given an indication that it is not about to risk the Rent Bill, as was at one time feared. The proposal originated, it is understood, with the Lieutenant Governor. It is what might have been expected from him. For although he is a staunch supporter of the Bill, and a consistent advocate of the peasant-proprietary theory, he is far too practical to accept theory unsupported by evidence as a basis upon which to build a system of legislation, changing, as this Bill proposes to change, the relations between landlord and tenant in Bengal. The authors of the Rent Bill are, doubtless, convinced that the inquiry will show that they have all along been right. Those who think otherwise are equally sanguine that a contrary result will follow. It is to be hoped, therefore, that the question will be decided after a full and open inquiry, "nothing being extenuated, nor ought set down in malice."—Englishman.

THE MERV QUESTION.

HAVING shown the way in which the occupation of Merv by Russia is likely to operate within the next two years upon Afghanistan, it is necessary to consider what steps England must take on her side to neutralise the effect of the latest advance of the Northern Empire. We do not believe that Russia will ever commit herself to an attack in real earnest upon India from such a base as Central Asia; but that is a question which must be reserved for separate discussion. But while we hold such an opinion, we also hold it as certain that Russia will endeavour to follow the policy she has illustrated by her conduct towards Turkey, that is, she will incessantly stir up trouble, and will, by causing mischief in Afghanistan and the neighbouring countries, endeavour to engage the sword arm of India. The material at her disposal is somewhat formidable. The tribes are large individually, and composed of men with whom adventure is, perhaps, their sole tradition. Frontier wars may, therefore, become more common and more important, and in case of any more than usually grave difficulty, Russia may be expected, acting on the very matter-of-fact and very worldly principle which guides her foreign policy, to seek to turn any difficulty to her own profit and her own advantage. This being the position which has to be faced, the sooner it is confronted the better. It is of no use disguising to oneself the character of Russian diplomacy or Russian statecraft. However much English officials may indulge in such an attempt, the fact will remain that Russian professions are about the most high-minded declarations anywhere to be met with, and Russian acts about the most practically selfish and unscrupulous of which history can furnish any example. And, as a matter of course, Russia, with the same temptations, will do in the Hindu Kush what she has done in the Balkan, and what she is doing in Armenia and the Eastern Taurus. The Government of India has passed out of the time when self-blindness is any further possible, except as an admitted confession of a dereliction of duty. The measures which suggest themselves vary, not only with the point on the frontier immediately concerned, but with the ulterior consequences for which it may be necessary to prepare. Generally, looking to the character of the Pathan tribes, and accepting the fact that there is in Afghanistan a very large subject population—the Sais—and recognising the fact that side by side in many places with the Afghans, there are warlike races, only recently subdued or still holding their own against the Afghans, it becomes necessary to consider whether common prudence does not dictate to the Government the exclusion from the ranks of its regiments of all men of independent or trans-frontier Pathan tribes. These men may be stalwart, may be brave, may be fine soldiers, but the experience in the Kuram and the desertions before Cabul show that there is an untrustworthy element amongst them apt to disclose itself at the most inconvenient of times and in the most dangerous circumstances. It seems imperatively necessary that this particular recruiting ground should be wholly exorcised from the lists of Indian commanding officers.

Then, in their place, the Government might well turn its attention to such tribes as the Hazaras, and should, following the example of Russia, who has set up to protect the Sais in Central Asia against the Uzbeks and other Turkish tribes, cultivate a position as a protector of the Sais and Hazaras against the lawlessness and ferocity of the Afghans. Further, it will be necessary, in order to secure the north west, to re-arrange the relations of the Viceroy with the Maharajah of Cashmere, and to establish a British resident at Gilgit, who shall take over from the Cashmere authorities the districts possessed by the Maharajah on the Indus. It would be well, moreover, if, as we have pointed out on many occasions, the Government were to frame a convention with the Maharajah, limiting his political possibilities, and taking over the military arrangements of his principality. We do not say that the task is a pleasant one; but we do say that it is a necessity, and that it might have been done with great propriety and with good effect very many years ago. If Russia is to establish herself on one side of the Pamir, it is better that the Government of India should now establish itself on this side, rather than have to do so as the result of complications between itself and Cashmere, or between Cashmere and Russia, or even between Cashmere and the sub-Pamir principalities.

Towards the south the railway should be extended to Candahar, and that city should be brought under British protection. At the same time, efforts should be made to obtain a solid footing in Beluchistan and in Southern Afghanistan. Lastly, it becomes necessary to consider the advisability of a British occupation of a point on the Mekran coast and of one of the Islands at the entrance at the Gulf of Persia. England has a right to look to her own interests, and her own interests only, and to do so before Russia obtains a position where she can interfere with any strong effect. It must be borne in mind that England has against Russia a long list of broken promises and falsified pledges, and that she has just as much right to consult the necessities of her position, as Russia had in the interests of her position in the Khanates to advance eastward from the South East Caspian, until Merv itself had been absorbed into her dominions; and if there is to be a quarrel between the two Empires, it is better that the quarrel should come sooner than later.—Indian Daily News.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

THE NATIVE PRESS ON THE THREATENED COLLISION BETWEEN RUSSIA AND ENGLAND.

WE regret to see that England's troubles are gathering thick and fast. The state of things in Egypt is supposed to be engaging all her attention just now. And Russia, ever watchful to make an advance towards India, has taken advantage of England's present embarrassments in Egypt, and having occupied the Merv, threatens to seize Balkh in Afghan Turkestan.

If Balkh falls a prey to Russian aggression, the seizure by the same Power of Herat, the Gate to India, is almost inevitable. We are not, therefore, surprised to hear that the British Government contemplates occupying Candahar, if Herat passes from the Amir's possession. It is said that the India Office has decided to communicate with Lord Ripon respecting the increasing of the frontier garrison and the occupation of Candahar. Sir Charles Dilke, in replying to Mr. Stanhope, in the House of Commons, said that "England now governs Quetta, controls the Bolan, is parleying with St. Petersburg respecting Merv, and has given the Amir further assurances of support." Russia is always deep in her game. While occupying Merv and taking steps to annex Balkh, she recalls General Tcherniaeff the Governor-General of Turkestan, and appoints General Rosenbach in his place. It is well known that General Tcherniaeff made additions to the Czar's Asiatic dominions, and distinguished himself by a policy of restless activity in Central Asia. He was in those regions what Lord Clive or Lord Dalhousie was in India years ago. A telegram from St. Petersburg tells us, however, that the appointment of General Rosenbach and the recall of General Tcherniaeff are considered as "a concession to English susceptibilities with respect to Russian action in Central Asia." The recent activity in Central Asia is quite irreconcilable with this appointment. But it is always most difficult to understand Russia. When she is meek, it is ten chances to one that she contemplates mischief. When she says one thing, she means quite another altogether.

It is impossible now to doubt that the occupation of Merv by Russia will hereafter lead to the annexation of Herat; and in that case Russia will be at the very doors of India and the Amir of Cabul will be a feudatory of the Czar. Complications—indeed serious complications—are impending in Central Asia, Persia, and Afghanistan. Ayub Khan, who claims the throne of Cabul, is now in Persia under the protection of the Shah, and is sure to take up arms against Amir Abdur Rahman Khan. Thus England is likely to be brought into collision not only with Russia but also with Persia. Ayub may be assisted by the Shah, as well as by the Czar. Somehow or other England is menaced with war at the two most important routes to India, namely Egypt and Afghanistan, both Mahomedan Powers. A collision between England and Russia in the East is sure to lead to serious complications in Europe; and we shall not in such a case be surprised at a general conflagration on the European Continent.

The times seem to be most critical for England. She requires now no ordinary wisdom to guide her affairs in Egypt, in Central Asia, in Afghanistan, and, above all, in India. Englishmen should be alive to the situation, and take precautionary measures to prevent the outbreak of the impending trouble, if possible, and to spare no effort to calm any disaffected elements that an unsympathetic policy may have raised to the surface in any part of the Indian Empire. The occupation of Calcutta and the extension of the railway to Quetta, now talked of, will not be sufficient to protect India against Russian aggression. The British and the people of India should be consolidated as much as possible, and the British rule placed, once and for all time to come, on a thoroughly popular basis.

STRIKE, BUT HEAR.

THIS is the title of a new pamphlet on the Bengal Rent Bill by a well-known zemindar of Mymensing, Babu Keshub Chuneer Anjanay Chowdry. Our author combines a knowledge of zemindari business and law, for he is both a zemindar and a pleader. He is also a practical man, and is moderate in his views and opinions. He has given a mass of valuable information, which will of course interest those who take an interest in the subject. We give the following illustrations on the subject of the growth of the occupancy right:—

1. A, B, and C have a village called Rampore appertaining to three different estates, but included within the same exterior boundary of the survey map. Shaik Tamiz lived for eight years in that part of the village which belongs to A, and had four cottahs of land only, and for another three years, and odd months, held four cottahs in B's village. In July, 1883, without changing his residence, takes three years' lease for thirty bighas of land from C, which were before under the cultivation of different resident ryots, but Master Tamiz, on the 3rd of March, 1883, gets a right of occupancy over that land to the exclusion of the resident ryots, and poor C, for no fault of his own, is deprived of the possessory right of these thirty bighas of lands.

2. A, B, C and D had their zemindari partitioned in 1854; Shaik Tamiz held two cottahs of land under A in village Rampore; in 1860 removes his baree to Shampore, some forty miles from the first village, and takes three cottahs of land from B, and then in 1882 he again removes his baree (house) to Krisnapore, some thirty miles north of Shampore, and erects a hut there in the zemindari of C. In Pous, 1882, some of the old resident ryots of Jadubpore belonging to D gave up about thirty bighas of land which Shaik Tamiz takes on a terminable lease of two years, but on March 2, 1883, he becomes an occupancy ryot, with all the advantages conferred on that favoured class of tenants; so, without even a warning, D is deprived of the thirty bighas of land, and the resident ryots also lose their lands for ever. I think it is needless to multiply instances showing the injustice of the rule contained in Chapter 5 of the Bill. According to the common law of the Zemindars, lands wanted by resident ryots cannot be given to or retained by non-resident ryots. Such is the effect of Chapter 5 that persons who were squatters according to their own conduct will suddenly acquire a right which can only be acquired by grant or prescription. A very high officer observed "as soon as this Bill becomes law the zemindars will lose every bit of their cultivated lands." According to the provisions of the present Bill, lands given to Shaik Tamiz on the 1st of March, 1883, will become, notwithstanding any contract to the contrary, his absolute property on the 3rd day of March, 1883. I do not see the justice of the rule according to which a settled ryot shall, notwithstanding any contract to the contrary, acquire a right of occupancy over every plot of land found in his possession on 3rd of March, 1883 (vide Sections 45 and 47). Our rulers tell us that they simply want to restore the ryots to their former possession. Admitting for argument's sake that Khoddust ryots of old, acquired right of occupancy over land as soon as they cultivated them, may I ask whether any instance can be shewn in which a Pycust ryot even claimed any such right? The distinction between the Khoddust and Pycust ryots depended on whether the ryot resided in his own holding or not. If the Bill aims at the restoration of the former state of affairs, then why it takes away the distinction between the two classes of ryots which has all along been observed in Bengal?

These illustrations we are told are taken from life. Comments upon them are superfluous.

We will give one more extract, rather a long one which shows how the twenty years' presumption clause has worked.

Before giving any opinion on the effects of Sections 15 and 16 of the Bill, let me proceed to state how the presumption from twenty years' uniform payment of rent created by Act 10. of 1859 operated in Eastern Bengal. During the first few years of the passing of the Act all the pleaders of the Munsiff's Court, and the Muktears, and the retired servants of the zemindars became Mokroridars by the help of forged dakhilas, and evidence of hired witnesses; then came the second batch, viz., mondots and well-to-do ryots. Whenever a rent suit was instituted the written statement was invariably as follows:—

1. I hold lands at fixed rates from previous to the Permanent Settlement.

2. I hold dakhilas for twenty years immediately preceding the institution of the suit to prove that during that period my rent has not been charged.

3. My rent is Rs. five, and the rate claimed by the zemindar is exorbitant; the rent of every Bigha of land in my village is annas 2, and not annas 10, as claimed by the zemindar.

In suits of this nature the ryots were successful in two different ways. In some of these suits they succeeded in proving the dakhilas by false witnesses. In others, in which they failed to substantiate the special plea of twenty years' uniform payment of rent, the deputy collectors, most of whom had identical interest with the ryots, came to the following conclusion. "It is true that the dakhilas filed by the defendant have not been proved, but as the plaintiff has failed to prove his claim by any written Kabuliat of the ryot, I can only decree the claim to the extent admitted by him." Thus the zemindar was thrown under the mercy of the ryot, who from that date began to deposit his rent in the court until he compelled the zemindar by the united passive resistance of the whole village to come to terms. Shaik Tamiz has obtained a great victory over his zemindar. This news spread like wildfire in his own and other neighbouring villages, and the other ryots came in flocks to his baree for paramarsa. Everybody knew that Shaik Tamiz and his father Shaik Nozib annually paid Rs. 20 as rent, Rs. 2 as dihihorcha, Rs. 1 as Patwaree fee, and Annas 4 as bastoo poojah; but how he could reduce his rent to Rs. 5 was a mystery which was revealed by Shaik Tamiz to his audience thus: "Brethren, listen, Lat Suhib has sent orders to all the Hakims to the effect that the zemindars cannot get anything in the shape of rent beyond that admitted by the ryots. All the ryots are advised to stop payment of rent and to raise up the same kind of objections in rent suits as Tamiz did. From that date the ryots combined and each offered to pay the quit rent as suited him best."

If the Lieutenant-Governor appoints a commission, and if that commission does its work in right earnest, we dare say all facts of this kind will come to light.—Hindoo Patriot.

RUPEE versus STERLING LOANS.

THE recent heavy decline in Government rupee securities, and the prolonged stringency of the money market, have led to a good deal of discussion regarding the relative advantages of rupee and sterling loans as the means of borrowing for India. It is contended by some that money could easily be raised in London by gold loans at an interest of 3½ per cent., and that, this being the case, silver 4 per cent. loans are altogether a mistake, and involve a ruinous sacrifice to the State. As might be expected from its importance, the question has before now engaged the serious attention of the Government, and we find that in 1879 a Committee, amongst whose members were Mr. Fawcett, Mr. Childers, Sir George Campbell, Mr. J. Cross, and Mr. Grant Duff, was appointed by the House of Commons to report on the subject.

The result of their deliberations was a recommendation that regular loans, such as those required for public works, should in future be floated in India. This decision was based upon the large increase that had taken place in sterling loans, and the advisability, in view of the unsettled position of silver and the appreciation of gold, of restricting as much as possible a form of indebtedness which rendered the liabilities of India an ever-varying and uncontrollable amount, and which might eventually result in their being very much larger than had been contemplated. It was found that from 1868-69 to 1878-79 the total ling debt had risen from £31,197,900 to £59,008,200, and that, in consequence of the depreciation of silver, the rupee equivalent of the latter sum in 1879 was about Rs. 70,80,98,000, or Rs. 11,80,16,000 more than it would have been at the exchange of 28. per rupee, at which, when the greater part of the loans were contracted, it was expected that they would be redeemable. The increase in the rupee debt during the same period was from Rs. 64,07,07,250 to Rs. 80,62,21,790, and this liability has, of course, the great advantage of not being subjected to any variations in its amount. It is impossible to deny that the considerations which led the Committee to arrive at their decision are entitled to great weight, and that to disregard them and take one's chance of the future of silver would savour much more of speculation than of sound finance. The speculation may, indeed, look promising, but we all know that the most promising speculations often fail, and it is, undoubtedly, the duty of a Government to incur such risks, if they are incurred at all, only under exceptional circumstances, and to a limited extent.

In a letter from Mr. Robert Steel, which appeared a few days ago in these columns, it was pointed out that, even if sterling loans resulted unfavourably as a silver speculation, there would be some compensation to Government in the increased revenue from opium, land, etc., likely to accrue from the fall in silver. It would not, we think, be judicious to be much influenced by collateral considerations of this kind, which are always characterised by a good deal of vagueness and uncertainty, and it is better that the discussion should be confined to the points directly bearing upon the question. The opium revenue has persevering opponents, and there is a philosophic school of Radicals with ideas about land which may add a few more to the many imbrolios for which philosophers are responsible.

The result of the policy recommended by the committee appointed by the House of Commons in 1879 has not so far been unfavourable. Since 1879 four loans have been raised in India, and subscribed for at the following rates:—1880, 4½ per Cent. Loan for 313 lakhs, subscribed for at Rs. 103 3-16. 1881, 4 per Cent. Loan for 300 lakhs, subscribed for at Rs. 105 3-16. 1882, 4 per Cent. Loan for 250 lakhs, subscribed at Rs. 98 29-32. 1883, 4 per Cent. Loan for 250 lakhs, subscribed for at Rs. 98½.

It will be seen that the average rate of issue of the last three loans was slightly above par. And as the most prosperous countries on the Continent of Europe and the Australian Colonies of Great Britain are not able to borrow on more advantageous terms, it would not seem that there is so far much to complain of.

It does not, however, follow that because the only correct rule that can be laid down is, as far as possible, to avoid increasing the gold liabilities of India, sterling loans should not be resorted to under any circumstances. It may occasionally happen that the London market is in a peculiarly favourable state for borrowing; and there may at times be difficulty in raising money on other than onerous terms in India. The former of these contingencies occurred at the end of 1880. There was a perfect glut of money in London, and the Indian Government took advantage of the opportunity and floated a 3½ per Cent. Loan at the excellent rate of issue of £103½. It is alleged, and we think with good reason, that no such conditions exist at present, and that if an attempt were made to bring out a loan in this country it would be a failure. The grounds for this opinion are that, owing to the fluctuating character of the dividend, rupee paper has become unpopular in England, and that India alone is not capable of absorbing the annual loans we have had during the last few years.

The current of rupee securities which used formerly to be steady in the direction of England, has changed, and during the first nine months of the present financial year there has been a decrease of about forty-seven lakhs in encased paper. The accounts of the presidency banks also point to the conclusion that the loan issued last year, combined with this reflux of paper to India, has been more than our markets can bear. The advances against Government securities at the Bank of Bengal, which at this time last year were Rs. 52,04,000, have been much heavier than usual since the issue of the last loan, and during the past five months have varied from Rs. 1,20,00,000 to Rs. 1,47,00,000. We have not the statements of the Banks of Bombay and Madras before us, but it is generally understood that the increase in their loans against Government paper has also been very large. The results of this state of affairs were, in the first instance, a considerable increase in the rate of interest, and afterwards a heavy decline in the price of securities, when holders decided that it would be better to sell than to run the risk of making the liquidation still more disastrous by further delay. The market for Four per Cents. fell, a few weeks ago, to Rs. 94½; but it has since recovered to Rs. 97, owing to large purchases being made for investment under the inducement afforded by the low prices. The strain upon the Indian money markets, caused by the increased proportion of their banking resources locked up in advances upon Government paper has been severe. By far the greater part of burden has been borne by the Presidency Banks, and, when the means at the disposal of these institutions, and the enormous trade of the country are considered, it will easily be understood that it has been heavy. The wealthy native capitalists, it is well known, do not as a rule either invest in, or advance to any extent against government paper, as they have other and more profitable ways of employing their funds. On the whole, then, we think it may be fairly concluded that the power of India to absorb loans has been overtaxed for the present, and that it would be judicious to give her some rest.

It remains to be considered whether sterling loans, as their advocates confidently assert, could be raised in London at so low a rate of interest as 3½ per cent. The successful issue of the loan in 1880, to which we have adverted, would certainly not alone be sufficient to warrant a conclusion in the affirmative; and the most flourishing colonies of Great Britain, whose securities are intrinsically fully as good as those of India, have not been able to borrow in London on lower terms than 4 per cent. Indian Government loans enjoy, however, the advantage that trustees are permitted to invest in them, and men of business whom we have consulted on the subject seem to be generally of opinion that, owing mainly to this circumstance, 3½ per cent. gold loans could be brought out successfully to a moderate extent in London. If this should prove to be the case, and existing facts are sufficient to justify the experiment being tried, the Secretary of State will incur a serious responsibility if he continues to force the Government of India to float 4 per Cent. Rupee Paper in India at a discount or even at par.—Englishman.

THE PROPOSED MAHOMEDAN UNIVERSITY.

(Bombay Gazette)

The following correspondence has been forwarded to us for publication:—

To His Highness the Nizam of the Deccan, &c., &c., &c.

Delhi, Jan. 24, 1884.

Sir,—I have the honour, in accordance with my promise, to send your Highness a draft scheme of the proposed University, which, I believe, will meet the views of a majority of the influential Mahomedans of Calcutta and Northern India, and I trust that it may equally be found acceptable to your Highness and receive your sanction.

If I can be of any further use in this matter, I beg you to command me; but I feel that the future of the scheme, which has already received wide approval, lies now mainly with your Highness; and I will only record my further promise here that, should it take an active shape, I will gladly contribute a sum of thirty thousand rupees for the endowment of a first Professorship according to the terms proposed.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your Highness's most obedient servant, (Signed) WILFRED SOAWEEN BLUNT.

SCHEME FOR A UNIVERSITY AT HYDERABAD.

The lamentable decline, during the last forty years of the Mahomedan community of India in wealth and social importance while, at the same time, it has been numerically an ever-increasing body, makes it a matter of anxious consideration with those who love their religion to consider by what means best to avert the danger attending such a condition of things, and to restore prosperity to the community and its activity as a living and beneficial influence in the progress of the Empire.

It is acknowledged that the evil has been principally brought about by the changed condition of the country. From a ruling and favoured race, the Mahomedan community has become only one of many bodies unfavoured by the State; and the fall from their high station was at the time accompanied by a corresponding collapse of energy; while, later, accidental circumstances, such as the change of the official language from Persian and Urdu to English, still further aggravated their misfortunes.

These, though they may regret them, the Mahomedans now know that it is useless to complain of. They have ceased to look for any reversal of the political settlement of India as a British province; and accepting the fact, they are fully aware that a new departure is necessary for them in correspondence with their new circumstances. Nor is this conviction lessened by the consideration that it would seem to be the tendency of the age to put every year more and more administrative power back into native hands, so that in the future, there may be expected to be an ever-increasing competition between the various sections of Indian society for advantage under the Imperial rule.

Again, it is no less acknowledged that in the modern conditions of Indian life, that which principally conduces to the advantage of each community is its superiority in education. The force of natural character is no longer a sufficient element of success, and acquired intelligence is daily asserting itself more strongly as the condition of all participation in public life. Instruction in the Arts and Sciences of the Western world is at the present day an absolute necessity for high success; and even in the lower walks of life a certain knowledge of these things has become desirable for all, perhaps, but the lowest class bound to agricultural labour. Certainly, no large community, such as is the Mahomedan in India, could hope to hold its own without a general increase of learning; and it is no longer contended by any section of the community that secular knowledge can be dispensed with, or that it is, if rightly directed, at all opposed to the best interests of religion.

On the other hand, it is equally certain that the vast majority of those who profess the faith of Islam look upon that faith as the most precious inheritance bequeathed them by their fathers and decline to put it in peril for the sake of any worldly advantage. They consider that, in seeking the general good of a Mahomedan community, the first and absolute essential to be considered is the good of the Mahomedan religion; and this is their first thought, too, when the practical question of individual education comes before them. All Mahomedan fathers are desirous that, before everything else, their sons should inherit their own gift of faith in the one true God and teaching of His Apostle.

Thus, then, it happens that, while recognising fully the necessity there is for worldly knowledge, the mass of respectable Mahomedans have held back, and still hold back, from the purely secular education afforded in Government schools and colleges to Hindoos and Christians with themselves. They look with suspicion on the teaching, and with more than suspicion on the teachers. They refuse to believe that any education can be a sound one which is without a religious basis. They see that neither history nor philosophy nor western literature can be taught by unbelievers in the Divine mission of their Prophet without serious risk of undermining their pupils' faith; and they find no institution in India in which these necessary branches of human learning are taught to Mahomedans wholly by Mahomedans.

Neither the Indian University, nor the Calcutta Madrisa, nor the Hoogly College, nor even the College of Allyghur entirely fulfil this condition. In the Indian University there is at the present moment no single Mahomedan professor. At the Madrisa, the president and many of the professors are Englishmen; and at Allyghur also the principal is an Englishman, and there are English and Hindu teachers. In none of them is there the certainty that religious influence other than Mahomedan shall not be brought to bear upon the students.

Lastly—and this is the most important consideration of all to the leaders of the Mahomedan community of India—they find in all the Empire no central school of religious thought such as is to be found in other Mahomedan lands. Although their population is the largest of any now existing in the world, they are without a recognised seat of learning which can claim for them to be the fountain head of orthodox opinion. They have no central body of Ulema, whose teaching and discussion should serve to keep alive the intellectual activity of the religious teachers, and so give its tone to the whole mass. They feel this to be the most serious want of all of their situation in presence of the growing intelligence of other religious bodies around them.

In view of all these circumstances, the following resolutions have, therefore, been suggested, and are now put before the Mahomedan community at large:—

1. That in each town a Provincial Committee shall be formed to consider where and under what conditions it will be best to found an educational establishment on a large scale which shall equally satisfy the religious and the secular wants of the community; and to raise subscriptions for that purpose.

2. That, this being done, a Central Committee shall be convened,—the same to be composed of one delegate from each of the Provincial Committees, in order finally to decide the questions raised in the Provincial Committees.

3. That, if possible, His Highness the Nizam of the Deccan be asked to become the patron of the Central Establishment, as being the most powerful Mahomedan Prince, now reigning in India, and that an humble petition be addressed to His Highness in that sense. The following suggestions are also made:—

1. That the Educational establishment should take the form of a University, to be called the Deccan (?) University, empowered to grant degrees in religion and in secular knowledge and to appoint professors in both branches of learning for such as shall repair to its metropolis (say Hyderabad) for their education. It is hoped that His Highness the Nizam may be pleased to grant a building to serve as University Hall and lecture rooms.

2. That, under the University, each province of the Indian Empire, or if funds suffice, each great city should erect or purchase at its own cost a building for its own students in the metropolis—the same to be called the college of that province or city at which lodging (not board or furniture) should be provided at nominal rates to the students. These colleges should be the property of the provinces or cities erecting them and should be managed by provincial or city trustees appointed by themselves in such manner (subject to the general laws of the University) as they shall themselves think most desirable. Thus each province or city would practically pay for and manage its own education.

3. That an appeal be made to the Mahomedan princes, noblemen, talukdars, zemindars, and rich merchants to found professorships for the University, the same to bear the names of their founders and to be vested as religious endowments in the hands of University Trustees, the duty of the professors being to give gratuitous public lectures to all students of the University. A donation of Rs. 30,000 shall be considered equivalent to founding a professorship, and shall entitle the donor to have his name perpetually connected with it, this, although it may be hereafter considered necessary to increase the provision out of University funds. Such donors should, moreover, be granted the title of "Founders" of the University, and should form its special Council.

4. That a similar appeal be made to poorer men to found scholarships under the like conditions, except that Rs. 10,000 should be the sum entitling the donor to perpetual remembrance—the said scholarships to be granted in the form of monthly stipends of thirty rupees to such students as having graduated in religious and secular knowledge in the University, may be chosen by special competition, on the condition that they shall act as schoolmasters in provincial towns and districts. The object of this provision will be to spread religious and secular education throughout the country. The founder of three scholarships to have the same privilege and title as the founder of a professorship.

5. That special provision be made in the scheme for the religious needs of the Shia as well as of the Sunni communities.

6. That His Highness the Nizam be prayed to grant a perpetual charter regulating the University according to the rules usual in such institutions.

7. That a memorial be at the same time addressed to His Excellency the Viceroy of India stating the objects of the University and humbly praying the countenance of the Imperial Government for the scheme.

Hyderabad, Deccan, Feb. 13, 1884.

My dear Mr. Blunt,—I am desired by His Highness to inform you in reply to your letter of Jan. 24. enclosing a memorandum embodying a scheme for the formation of a Mahomedan University, that His Highness cordially approves of your suggestions, and will give every support in his power to any attempt that may be made to carry them out. His Highness had the honour of holding a conversation with His Excellency the Viceroy, during his short sojourn here, in the course of which he understood that His Excellency was prepared to countenance and support the scheme.

I am to say that His Highness regards the scheme as one calculated immensely to advance the cause of Mahomedan progress, and that he will be glad if Hyderabad is given the honour, by preference, of becoming the centre of the movement. As, however, the scheme has originated with you, and you have taken the trouble of ascertaining the views of the leading Mahomedans in all parts of India, His Highness would have wished that you had prolonged your stay in this country, so as to see it carried out. In any case, if your other engagements give you time to pay another visit to Hyderabad, His Highness will be gratified to have your assistance in the matter. His Highness is glad to say that His Excellency the Viceroy has promised him his.—Believe me, yours very sincerely, (Signed) SALAR JUNG.

THE DEFENCE ASSOCIATION.

THE following letter on the subject of the Ilbert Bill and the attitude of the European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association has been published:—

"In order that members of the European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association should understand the position of the Association with reference to the arrangement come to about the Ilbert Bill on December 21 last, and in order that they may clearly comprehend the position of the European and Anglo-Indian community under the Act, which will probably come into force on May 1 next, the Council of the Association have deemed it advisable to circulate to all members the following letter, addressed to one of its most earnest and influential supporters:—

Dated Feb. 11, 1884.

To—

Dear Sir,—Under the new Act no European British subject will be liable to be tried for any offence whatever, of however trivial a nature, by a district magistrate or sessions judge, European or native, without a jury.

The extent of the victory which the Council of the Association have managed to secure under circumstances of the very greatest difficulty, both in England and in India, lies in the establishment of the following facts:—

- 1.—This Act will be practically a dead-letter, and all legislation in this direction stayed.

- 2.—The principle is affirmed by the Government itself that all European British subjects shall be considered a specially-privileged class, and shall not be liable to be tried by any native at any time, unless safeguarded by a jury of which the majority shall be men of their own race.

- 3.—The affirmation of jury principle in the case of trial of European British subjects, renders it impossible that the Act can afford a precedent for further legislation in the same direction; whilst it will so hamper the district magistrates that they almost necessarily will be restrained by executive orders, from exercising any sort of criminal jurisdiction over Europeans.

- 4.—The affirmation of the jury principle enables us to enlist the intelligent and appreciative sympathy of the English public in defence of our rights.

- 5.—We have thus secured a firm platform from which we shall be enabled to defend logically and on principle, all the existing legal rights and constitutional privileges of the British community in India.

Had the Defence Association refused to accept the jury safeguard, the Bill would have been inevitably carried over our heads, divested of the safeguard, whilst the European community would in that case have certainly alienated the sympathies of all thoughtful men both in India and in England. In other words, we should have secured a permanent and utter defeat, and the Government and the natives would have secured a corresponding victory.

If the European community is to hold its own and maintain its prestige against the antagonistic interests with which it has to contend, this can only be done by complete and harmonious organisation and implicit confidence in a powerful and representative executive.

I desire to explain for your consideration, as an illustration of the victory which has been won, the remarkable difference between the existing position of the non-official European community, and that which it held prior to the formation of the Defence Association. The desponding tone of the native press and the marked deference lately paid to non-official opinion, best exemplify this change.

It will be well to consider in future public action as to whether it may not be deemed desirable, in the interests of the community, to strengthen the hands of the central executive by yielding a more unqualified, unanimous, and loyal support, than has been done in the present instance at certain isolated meetings in the mofussil. The dissents which were published in the press, before these meetings could have possibly understood and appreciated all the bearings of the Concordat, went a considerable way, if not to defeat the substance, at all events to diminish the lustre, of the victory which had been gained after the severest political struggle on record in India. This fact was at once apprehended by the native papers and induced an immediate change of tone.

The wisdom of the course which the Council adopted is being emphasized daily by the potent exaltation of the prestige of the non-official European community both in the estimation of the Government and the natives.

Our immediate endeavours will now be directed to work on the same lines so as to obtain, if possible, the reversal of the policy of exclusion of domiciled Europeans from appointments of profit in India.—Times of India.

A correspondent, writing from Belgaum, says:—"General regret is felt here at the approaching departure from our midst of Brigadier General G. T. According to the Pioneer, the question of raising the usual annual Public Works loan in gold or silver has been for some little time past engaging the attention of the authorities, both in Calcutta and in London. This, of course, is mainly owing to the fact that a silver loan can only be floated at a disadvantage here just now; whereas it is believed that a loan in gold could be raised in England under highly satisfactory conditions.

The Commissionership of Kumaon, about to be vacated by Lieutenant General Sir Henry Ramsay, is to be conferred upon Mr. H. G. Ross, at present engaged in settlement operations in Dohra Doo. The appointment is one that is much coveted; it combines more than ordinary personal and administrative freedom, a fine climate, and Rs. 2,000 a month.

By a private letter from Benares, dated March 1, the Indian Daily News regrets to learn that the adopted son of Maharajah Surrut Soondoree died there on the 29th ultimo. Small-pox has broken out in the native part of the city, and is raging fearfully. Several deaths have occurred in consequence. The weather is getting rather too hot for this time of the year.

Subscriptions to the Cavagnari Memorial Fund do not come in so fast as might be expected, as, out of a sum of 4,000 rupees required, only 2,177 rupees had been received up to the end of February last. It may be remembered that the proposed memorial was to consist, 1st, of a coloured window in the Kohat Church; 2nd, a portrait in oils to be hung up in some public institution in Kohat; and a "Cavagnari Scholarship" open to schools (Government and other) in the Peshawar and Derajat divisions. The amount required, it was hoped, would be raised in the Punjab alone, by subscriptions limited to Rs. 20 each. But of the amount subscribed considerably more than half has been subscribed outside the limits of the Punjab; in the Hyderabad Assigned Districts (over Rs. 820), Quetta, and the North-West Provinces, assisted by officers of the army unconnected with the Punjab. Should the full amount of Rs. 4,000 not be subscribed, a portion of the above proposal must necessarily be abandoned—a result which would be a matter of regret, and one which it is to be hoped may yet be avoided.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, APRIL 1, 1884.

INDIA MOURNS WITH ENGLAND.

ENGLISHMEN and Indians alike have this week been smitten with a great national sorrow. They are united in mourning the loss of a most amiable and accomplished Prince, a most noble-minded and true-hearted man. And above all, they are united in deep respectful sympathy with the Gracious Lady, once again so solely grief-stricken, who is to the one race a Queen, to the other an Empress, but the beloved Mother in the hearts of both. It is needless to enlarge on the rare promise of the young life, already rich in actual achievement, that has been taken from us, apparently so prematurely; for in India, as in England, the story of that life, with its many touching and endearing characteristics, is well-known. But as one of the few journals that claim to represent something of the sentiments of both the great nationalities of the Empire, we would fain here dwell on the oneness of the feelings which animate them both, in everything that concerns the Royal and Imperial Family of England and India. Englishmen and Indians alike will again learn, on this mournful occasion even more and more, to cherish and foster those sentiments of personal loyalty, which can exercise such a potent influence in effacing minor and ephemeral causes of difference; and which tend, perhaps, more than ought else, to weld together the constituent parts of this great Empire into one harmonious Federation.

During the recent celebration of the Carnival at Goa several serious disturbances occurred, and one man was kicked to death.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE'S REPORT ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

THE publication of the preliminary report of the Select Committee on the Bengal Tenancy Bill, and of the Bill itself as revised by the committee, has created, we learn, no little sensation in Calcutta. As we have frequently pointed out in these columns, the composition of the Select Committee was such, that the general tendency of its report—to say ditto to Mr. Ilbert—was a foregone conclusion. The tactical "smartness," which has been the most characteristic feature of the administration of Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert, was always certain to be rewarded with a success of this kind. But hardly any one, we believe, was prepared for the extreme ardour with which Mr. Ilbert's docile admirers and nominees in the Viceregal Council have manifested their devotion to their patron; and it may even be doubted whether Lord Ripon himself, in his secret heart, will be altogether grateful for the zeal, untempered by discretion, that has quite run away with the eager competitors for the Viceregal smile. From the Times telegram it appears that the courtly majority in the Council has ridden roughshod over the two solitary representatives of the constitutional element, the Maharajah of Darbhanga and the Hon. Kristodas Pal. The Bill, as amended in Committee, strikes at the landlords still more fiercely than Mr. Ilbert's original proposals—whilst it will convert the Bengal ryots very largely into mere day-labourers. The middleman and the money-lender, those pets of Radical legislation, will flourish on the impoverishment of the zemindars and the degradation of the tenants. All this might have been foretold. But we were hardly prepared for the way in which the constitutional Opposition, as it now appears, was prevented from adequately discussing, or even considering, the various amendments. Mr. Ameer Ali appears to have been nominated to the Viceregal Council, and actually placed on the Select Committee, to report on this Bill, on the strength of an article recently published by him in an English magazine, warmly supporting Mr. Ilbert's notions! And the two real exponents of Indian national feeling have been prevented from taking that part in the debates to which they were entitled, by incessant and wearisome sittings, and by utterly inadequate notice of the Ilbertite amendments continually sprung upon them. The dissent which the Maharajah of Darbhanga is to record will be looked for with keen interest by all lovers of constitutional freedom of debate; whilst the summary of the Hon. Kristodas Pal's dissent, which is given by the Times correspondent, shows it to be a manly and vigorous protest, at once against the mad folly of the visionaries who are now misgoverning India, and against the exceedingly unfair methods by which the Bill has been rushed through the Select Committee, and the unseemly haste which has been displayed by the Viceregal Court in flying from the heat of Calcutta to the cool heights of Simla.

HIGH EDUCATION IN INDIA.

THE Indian Daily News has the following on the prospects of change—or revolutions—in the Educational system in India :—

"Lord Ripon is now devoting his attention to the framing of the measure which is to form the outcome of the Education Commission's lengthened labours and elaborate report, and has called Professor Wordsworth, the well-known Principal of the Elphinstone College, from Bombay, to join with educational authorities on this side of India in advising on certain points connected with the radical changes of system in contemplation, which, it is understood, will be of a very extensive and highly important nature. The native papers are endeavouring to induce His Excellency to take up the question of reforming the Legislative Councils, and are crying out that what the country requires is to have a more representative character given to them; but it is not likely that Lord Ripon, especially with the Education Bill on his hands, will find either time or inclination during the short remaining period of his Viceroyalty to meddle with so large a question, and one of such delicacy and difficulty. It has been announced with more or less show of authority that nothing short of a dissolution of Parliament will cause his lordship to resign before the expiration of his natural term of office; but we do not think there would be any very great surprise felt amongst the best-informed people if he were to return home at the close of the approaching Simla season."

Meanwhile, slowly—but very slowly—the educated Native community is awaking to the danger which threatens their best interests. The Hindoo Patriot to hand by the last mail contains the following significant paragraph:—

"We have received a telegram from Cuddapah to the effect that the first fruit of the Education Commission in Madras has been the raising of the fees of the English Schools in that district. We do not understand the reason of the strange move. We hope we will be supplied with details."

We desire to call the attention of the "Society for the Promotion of High Education in India" to this warning note. It is possible that the times are not, as yet, altogether propitious for active movement on the part of the Society. But we are very confident that before very long, its members will be called upon to arouse themselves, if they wish to avert the ruin of the cause they have at heart.

INDIA IN PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

THE INDIAN CONTINGENT.

Mr. SALT asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether any decision has been arrived at with respect to an appeal which, he said, on August 7 last, had been forwarded to the Government of India regarding certain disputed claims; and whether any, and, if so, what compensation had been given in respect of such claims.

Mr. CROSS: The appeal in question having been sent to the Government of India, they replied :—"We are of opinion that Mr. Stringer received every consideration from the military authorities of the Indian contingent, and that there are no sufficient grounds why the award of the arbitrator should be set aside, and any further sums paid to Mr. Stringer." Mr. Stringer was, therefore, informed last December that he would receive no grant in excess of the sum awarded by the arbitrators appointed at Alexandria to settle his dispute.

THE INDIAN GRADATION LIST.

Mr. J. K. CROSS, in reply to Mr. Onslow, said: The cavalry officers who came under the terms of the general order in question waived their claim to all advantages attaching to their position as local cavalry officers, one of these advantages being brevet promotion in succession to general officers. Finding, however, that the Government of India had already formally promised these officers the continuance of their brevet promotion, the Secretary of State determined to accept this decision, and the Government of India was informed in January last, that the system of brevet promotion would be continued. The brevet promotion of an officer made in anticipation by the local authorities, but which had not been confirmed, was thereupon submitted for Her Majesty's approval. (Hear, hear.)

THE OPIUM TRADE.

Mr. CROPPER asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether his attention had been drawn to a telegram published in the Times of March 17, stating that Sir Auckland Colvin, in his financial statement, says as follows :—"That the Government is indebted to Mr. Rivett Carnac, opium agent at Benares, for some successful experiments in the preparation of Malwa opium into a form suited for local consumption, experiments which in 1882 set free 1,372 chests, and in 1883 3,000 chests of provision opium (or opium available for export), at a profit to the Government of 194,845 rupees in the former, and of 756,347 rupees in the latter year;" whether the Indian Government had, during the last two years, purchased a quantity of opium produced in the native States of India and prepared it in the Government factories for sale in British India; whether this new form of the opium trade had the approval of Her Majesty's Government; whether any limit was to be put to the quantity of Malwa opium which might thus be purchased and prepared for local consumption, or whether it was to be increased indefinitely; and whether that system of purchasing Malwa opium for preparation in the Government factories was to be confined to opium for local consumption in India, or extended to the preparation of the Malwa opium into the form suitable for exportation to China.

Mr. CROSS: I have read the telegram referred to. Two thousand maunds of Malwa opium were purchased in 1882 under circumstances referred to in Sir E. Baring's financial statement for 1883-4, paragraph 202; and a further quantity was purchased in 1883. The export demand is as much as the present production of Bengal can usually supply; and it has been thought better to set free the Bengal production to meet this export demand, supplying the local consumption of Bengal by Malwa opium, rather than to extend the cultivation of the poppy in Bengal. The Malwa opium so purchased is not intended for export, but will be confined to local consumption. The Secretary of State sees no reason to disapprove of this arrangement.

EXPENDITURE ON INDIAN RAILWAYS.

Mr. O'DONNELL asked the Under Secretary of State for India, with reference to the recent statement of Lord Kimberley, that "they had spent upon railways in India during the last three years the following sums :—In 1881-2, £5,729,606; 1882-3, £6,493,100; and in 1883-4, £8,304,700." To what extent interest upon this outlay had been guaranteed by the Government; and for what time the guarantee was to run.

Mr. CROSS: I am glad of the opportunity of correcting an error in the figures which were supplied to Lord Kimberley by the Department, and I need not say how much the Secretary of State regrets the mistake. On further examination it has been found that those figures included certain considerable items which will be charged to the revenue account of the Indian railways, and which, therefore, should not have been treated as capital expenditure, though temporarily appearing in the capital account. The correct figures of capital expenditure on Indian railways are :—1881-2, £4,020,000, 1882-3, £4,452,000 (revised estimate); 1883-4, £6,626,000 (Budget estimate), besides which the Bengal and North-Western Company, which is not in any way subsidised by the State, may have spent from £400,000 to £500,000. The estimate of expenditure for 1883-4 appears to be in excess of the amount actually spent, which, according to the latest telegram is £5,308,000. The portion of the estimated expenditure of these three years on which interest would be guaranteed is £4,000,000; interest on £900,000 being guaranteed for about five years; and on the remainder until the lines become the property of the State by purchase.

EXPORT OF WHEAT FROM INDIA.

Mr. O'DONNELL asked the Under Secretary of State for India, with regard to Lord Kimberley's statement to a deputation of English manufacturers and capitalists on Friday, that "there has been a surprising increase of the wheat trade which was seen to still further development;" whether he could give the grounds for expecting this further development, and whether this development was not taking place at the expense of the food supplies of the population.

Mr. CROSS: The production of wheat in the Central Provinces and the Punjab will naturally develop as a greater population devotes itself to the cultivation of the waste lands and in the Punjab as the irrigation works in progress, and lately opened, exercise their natural influence. That the development is not taking place at the expense of the food supplies of the people is shown by the fact that, whereas in 1879, when the export of wheat was only 1,056,720 cwt., the price of millets averaged 5s. 7½d. per cwt.; in 1882, when the export of wheat was 19,910,005 cwt., the price of millets was 3s. 4½d., showing that, along with an enormous increase in the export of wheat, there had been a fall in the value of ordinary grain foods, of 40 per cent.

Mr. O'DONNELL asked a series of questions as to authoritative statements to the effect that the production was below the requirements of the population.

Mr. J. HOWARD asked whether it was not the fact that the exports simply represented the difference between a good crop and a bad crop.

The SPEAKER said that these appeared to be large questions which were of the nature of debate. (Cheers.)

COMMITTEE ON INDIAN RAILWAYS.

Mr. O'DONNELL asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether witnesses representing the views of the Government of India would be examined before the Special Committee on Indian Railways.

Mr. CROSS: The Government of India have deputed Major Conway-Gordon, one of the Under Secretaries in the Public Works Department, and Mr. Westland, the Comptroller-General, to represent their views to the Select Committee.

Mr. O'DONNELL asked how many witnesses representing the various classes of the Indian population would be heard.

Mr. CROSS said that if the hon. member would communicate with any of the Indian associations appearing before the committee, he could probably secure the examination of any witnesses he desired to recommend.

PRODUCE MARKETS.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

SUGAR continues in the same extremely depressed state as yesterday, the business being only 22 casks crystallized demerara, by private contract. Yesterday a cargo of St. Kitts, of the coast, sold at 15s. per cwt. for the United Kingdom. Beef has been sold at 15s. 9d. prompt. Clyde market prices are quoted firmer, with more business doing.

COFFEE.—At the public sale the tone was dull, and prices again rather lower in many cases, 229 casks 34 barrels and bags plantation, Ceylon, partly—small and common, 64s. to 61s.; middling to good middling, 65s. to 68s.; 65 casks 1,530 bags East India medium, 62s. 6d. to 66s. 6d.; bold 76s. 6d. to 77s. 6d., small in proportion; 6 tierces, 573 barrels and bags Jamaica went at 44s. 6d. to 47s. for rather mixed to good ordinary; 53s. 6d. to 55s., fine ordinary greenish; 831 bags foreign, small part sold—Guatemala, 15s. to 58s.; Central America, 52s. 6d. to 58s.; and Costa Rica, 55s. to 66s. 6d. per cwt.

SPICES.—At the public sales 684 packages Cochininger sold rather lower—rough, 44s. to 46s.; part cut end, 44s. to 44s. 6d.; rather small to fair bright medium cut, 52s. 3d. to 52s. 6d.; and rather bold and part cut, 60s. per cwt. Penang white pepper, ½d. lower, 247 bags selling at 9d. to 8½d.; of 350 bags Singapore a lot or two sold without alteration at 9½d.; 465 bags common Penang black went rather cheaper at 8½d. to 6¾d.; and of 712 bags Singapore a lot or two sold at 7½d. 877 bags Malabar, Siam, etc., withdrawn. Zanihar cloves are slightly easier, about one-fourth of 519 bags realising 4¾d. to 4½d. for fair. 297 bags pimento went cheaply at 2¾d. to 2½d. 89 packages eastern nutmegs—at a third sold, small rather lower at 1s. 10d. to 2s.; medium Penang, 2s. 9d.; Quilon Penang kind, 2s. 5d. to 2s. 7d. 46 packages West India, 1s. 6d. to 2s. 4d. 110 packages mace, old import, about one half sold; Penang red, 1s. 4d. to 1s. 5d. per lb. 10 casks Cassia buds sold at 32s. 6d.

SAGO.—In auction 155 bags medium sold without reserve at 12s 6d., one lot 13s, showing 6d to 9d decline; 167 bags small bought in at 12s. 6d., and 800 bags flour at 11s. 6d. 1,850 bags pearl tapioca went rather lower; seed at 11s. to 11s. 6d.; medium at 11s. 6d. to 12s. 6d. per cwt. 955 bags Singapore flake, small part sold at 1½d. to 1¾d. per lb.

RICE has been firm, but no business reported in Burmah grain to arrive; but on the spot 1,000 bags Nacranzie was 7s. 1½d. per cwt.

SHRIMP.—A steady market for current qualities.

JUTE steady. Several parcels in dock sold at £13 10s. to £15 5s. Rejections £8 2s. 6d. Also further business for Dundee in dock. From Messrs. Fildes and Co.'s report;—"Extreme depression has prevailed in our market throughout the past fortnight in consequence of continued heavy arrivals, and the great anxiety shown by holders to realise, especially after the sudden and unexpected action of the holders of David's marks, who previous to arrival had held for rates far beyond their comparative value, but since have forced them off at best obtainable, thus completely upsetting the calculations of speculators who expected that these would be warehoused on arrival, and prices have given way about 30s. per ton for common, and 15s. to 20s. on other descriptions. At the close, however, the market is slightly firmer, but we cannot yet anticipate any important improvement.

COTTON.—The market for East India descriptions continues strong, but owing to the firmness of holders only a moderate business has resulted. American futures have fallen 1-32d. to 3-64d. per lb. Sales about 1,000 bales, including Tinnivelly, at 5½d. to 55-16d, Bengal at 4¼d., and Salem at 5d. per lb. Forward delivery, American, April-August, 6 1-64d. to 6 13-64d. per lb. for middling, j.m.c.

TUESDAY EVENING.

Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson say that a further decline in quotations of imported produce since the 20th inst., fails to create confidence, or induce buyers to take supplies in anticipation of current requirements. The retrograde movement in coffee in New York and Harve has continued, the fall upon good average Santos in the latter market being very heavy during the past fortnight. A floating cargo of this description has been sold at a lower price. Many importers of East India descriptions have realised upon arrival, accepting a reduction of 4s. to 5s. Plantation Ceylon and other kinds are 2s. to 3s. per cwt. lower. To-day the market was exceedingly flat, with a downward tendency. The Netherlands Trading Company announce for their public sale next Wednesday, 114,700 bags; 1249 cases, good ordinary Java, being valued at about 30 cents or 2 to 2½ costs under the quotation of February. Sugar is very depressed, and prices again show weakness, German beet for prompt shipment, selling at 15s. 7½d. to 15s. 9d. per cwt., f.o.b. West India, including Crystallized, cannot be disposed of in quality, even at easier rates. Low brown kinds are dull. Native Penang selling at 10s. 3d. per cwt. Nothing of interest has transpired in the refined markets. The demand for pieces is slow at rather lower rates, but the trade have taken moderate supplies of dry goods. Ceylon cocoa has been sold at about previous quotations. Cinchona went at easier rates. Rice is firm, although rather quiet. The China tea market remains flat by private contract. At the auctions, prices have been generally in favour of the buyers. Indian growths present no new feature to notice; and the public sales have passed with a dragging tendency. The quantity of Cinnamon in the monthly sales on the 31st inst., will be 550 bales. Other spice has been dull with prices tending downward.

INDIAN TEA.—2,817 packages were offered at to-day's auctions and mostly sold; Souchongs from 10d. to 11d. per lb. showed firmness; 400 packages of Java tea were also sold of the Dramaga garden at about previous rates. At the China sales, 5,228 packages Congou went sold without reserve, and 2,970 green and scented teas, without alteration in prices.

SUGAR.—The demand is limited, and the business in West India amounts only to 191 casks crystallized Demerara, of which the prices do not transpire. Business has been done in Native Penang, including 200 to 300 tons, at 10s. 3d., and a parcel of Cebu, sold at 12s. The Clyde market is steady for good qualities; beet again lower, but a good business done. M. Bertrand Silz, writing on the 26th, stated that after his last circular of a fortnight ago, transactions were at first very restricted, then holders were discouraged, and since, there has again been a rapid fall in prices. The hope that the surtax would be increased, has been relinquished, the modification of the legislation is yet doubtful, and, should it happen, its application would have no immediate effect on the rates. In truth, the prices now quoted, surprise even the most pessimist. This excess of evil will have a remedy. At such low prices, manufacturing does not pay, and a large number of factories will remain at a standstill by the next crop. Therefore, production will diminish, and prices will be rendered normal by a less overwhelming production.

COFFEE.—Great depression prevails, and East Indian descriptions in the public went at a further decline of 1s. to 2s. per cwt. 315 casks 2,088 bags partly sold. Medium pale to good medium, 56s. 6d. to 65s.; bold, 66s. 6d. to 69s. 6d.; coloury, 75s. to 79s.; 134 casks 36 barrels and bags plantation Ceylon showed rather low rate, small and low middling, 57s. to 58s. 6d.; middling to good middling, 63s. to 66s. 6d.; rather bold, 70s. to 74s.; good bold, 75s. to 80s. 1,435 bags Guatemala went at some further decline, good ordinary, 45s. 6d. to 46s.; fine ordinary to low middling, 52s. to 57s. up to 61s. 6d. for bold. 408 bags Costa Rica and 704 bags Central American withdrawn.

RICE.—Sales have been limited.

FRIDAY EVENING.

THE EUPHRATES VALLEY ROUTE.—General Sir Lewis Pelly, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., last Friday, presided at the meeting of the Royal United Service Institution, when Mr. J. B. Fell, C.B., lectured on "The necessity for an improved means of communication with India, via the Euphrates Valley route." The chairman, in opening the proceedings, referred to the importance of the subject, and to the exceptional opportunities which Mr. Fell had of making himself acquainted with it, and observed that no one who, apart from the mere party contests of the hour, concerned himself with the various interests of our widely-scattered empire could ignore the events which were now happening—events which might give France and Russia such strategical positions as would indicate the necessity of the British securing a central, safe, and remunerative line to India, available either for purposes of commerce or of war. Mr. Fell commenced his paper by a reference to the great changes which had occurred to bring the Euphrates Valley Railway scheme once more into public notice. One of these was the Russian occupation of Merv; the other was the insufficiency and the insecurity of the Suez Canal and the Egyptian route to India. He enlarged upon the dangers of Russian aggressions in the direction of India, and, pressing the necessity for an alternative route, urged the advantage of a railway from the Mediterranean to the Persian Gulf where could be found a convenient point from which to commence the prolongation of the railway to Kurrachee. The length of the railway proposed would be 850 miles; and the cost about £9,000,000 sterling, which, he urged, should be a line under guarantee from the British Government. The discussion was opened by Colonel Champain, R.E., who objected to the line being formed on a Government guarantee, and said that the line sketched out by the lecturer would be one that travellers would not choose, that the short saving of time would not bring much goods traffic, and that the proposed line, by passing near Russian territory would place great responsibilities on the country. Then he questioned whether soldiers could be cooped up in carriages for a long overland journey to India, and that Turkey would give, or would be allowed to give, the concession to make a strategical line. Colonel Park supported the view that an alternative route to India was desirable, and Captain Cameron, R.N., advocated the route, with the addition of Cyprus as a place d'armes. Mr. Cust urged that the question should be discussed, not from the narrow standpoint of British interests with the bugbear of Russian advance, but from the wider one of the benefit to the world. Remarks by Captain Bedford Pim and others followed, and the meeting closed with thanks to the lecturer.

We greatly regret to learn, says the Ceylon Observer, that the hot weather and fatigue affected Mr. Burnside seriously at Kurunegala. The attack seems to have been choleraic in its nature, and was followed by fainting. The court had to be adjourned. We trust the sickness was merely temporary, and that the Chief Justice is again equal to the important duties of his post. We hope that the jurist who gave Ceylon its first penal and procedure codes may be spared to see them many years in operation, and that a civil code from his able hand may complete the work of legal and judicial reform.

The net receipts of all the Indian railways for the period of April 1, 1883, to Feb., 1884, show advance Rs. 59,24,705, as compared with the corresponding period of the previous year.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught bagged his first tiger on March 5, about thirty miles out of Ulwar. The beast, which is supposed to have been a man-eater, measured nine feet five inches. News has been brought into the camp of several other tigers in the neighbourhood.

FIFTY-SEVEN.SOME ACCOUNT OF THE ADMINISTRATION OF INDIAN DISTRICTS
DURING THE REVOLT OF THE BENGAL ARMY.

BY

HENRY GEORGE KEENE, C.I.E., M.R.A.S.,

Author of "The Fall of the Mughal Empire," &c.

"The author breaks new ground. He essays to inform us how the different districts in the North West were preserved from anarchy by their civil administrators during such a stupendous catastrophe as the revolt of the army, upon whose support social order, in a great measure, rested. The task involves stories of adventure and pluck, which never come amiss to the many readers who have relatives serving abroad; and these stories are given in picturesque language, with a conciseness precluding tedium, and in a tone throughout of the modesty which seems natural where duty is considered the first obligation, and courage the first attribute, of an English gentleman."—World

"Mr. Keene tells how the civil officers in the districts kept or restored order, largely by their own individual influence, often by heroic exertion, and almost invariably with the loyal aid of native subordinates. He describes the events which occurred in some eight or nine districts of the North West Provinces and Bengal. His narrative is unpretentious in style, but it clearly shows that courage, firmness, heroism, and self-sacrifice were displayed among the members of the Indian Civil Service, as well as by the soldiers who stormed Delhi, relieved Lucknow, and avenged the crimes of Cawnpore."—Scotsman

"This work claims our hearty recognition of its thoroughness. It gives us a most readable and trustworthy re-creation of the reports of eye-witnesses, always the most valuable to the student of history. It has a special interest from the fact that Mr. Keene was himself one of those district officers who honourably held their ground during those fearful exciting times."—Literary World

"Mr. Keene writes to give somewhat tardy honour where it is due—viz., to the civilian officers who, during the period of the Indian Mutiny, remained at their posts, and in many instances deprived of military aid, had themselves to raise and command levies for the protection of the district."—Morning Post

"A volume which seems to us to break new ground, and to supply a want felt by those who have ever endeavoured to study the subject. . . . The matter is, for the most part, new, and it treats of incidents in themselves fairly entitled to attention, and calculated to excite interest. . . . The fights, the rides, and the surprises and the escapes are all related in picturesque language."—Home News

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in 'Bombay' a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterized by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt the advances from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

In fact, the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him five COCKER'S PILLS will never fade from my memory; and a friend of mine, who passed through the same district many months afterwards, informed me that my fame as a medicine-man had not died out, but that the marvellous cure was even then a theme of conversation in the bazaar."

Contemporary Review.—"It is most interesting, as well as . . . instructive throughout."
Graphic.—"The subject is of abounding interest. . . Mr. Brayley Hodgetts deserves hearty thanks for bringing such a life so clearly before the public."
Academy.—"The account of the third battle of Plevna . . . is one of the most stirring pieces of military journalism that we have ever read."
Public Opinion.—"Such will suffice to give us an idea of the 'Reminiscences' of the man who knew no fear, who passed as by a miracle through every danger, and who, had he lived, might have become the greatest soldier of our age. . . The work is, in every respect, thoroughly well got up. . . Too much praise cannot be given to Mr. E. A. Brayley Hodgetts for the able manner in which he has translated the work into English, and who has succeeded in making it so interesting and readable."
Whitehall Review.—"The Author's peculiarly happy anecdotal style of narration accords perfectly with the eventful career of Skobeleff, his brilliant exploits, and his versatile genius."
Spectator.—"The writer correctly estimates his work as . . . 'merely a collection of fragmentary reminiscences.' From these fragments, however, it is easy to see that Skobeleff was a real hero of the knight-errant, a fairy-prince kind."
Liverpool Mercury.—"A very remarkably entertaining book has been issued by Messrs. W. H. Allen of Waterloo place, called 'Personal Reminiscences of General Skobeleff.' The author is a romancer."
Scotsman.—"The admiration verging on idolatry with which Russians regard the memory of General Skobeleff is forcibly illustrated in this volume. . . Very skilfully translated by E. A. Brayley Hodgetts."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, APRIL 7, 1884.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, March 21; Madras and Allahabad, March 19; Calcutta, March 18.

THE Calcutta Englishman has the following notice of Mr. Lethbridge's candidature at Whitby:—

"It will be welcome news to many of our readers that Mr. Roper Lethbridge, C.I.E., has become a candidate for Whitby, and that he has met with a favourable reception from the electors, on the occasion of his meeting with them for the purpose of expressing his political views. India is suffering because there are so few men in the House of Commons who understand either her wants or her commercial possibilities. It may, one day, become a question whether some personal knowledge of one or other of the British Colonies or dependencies ought not to be insisted upon as an absolutely necessary qualification for candidature for a seat in the House of Commons. Hours are wasted in discussions on Indian affairs simply because the legislature does not possess the elementary knowledge—which can be obtained only by personal experience—of the subtle and delicate question arising, in many cases, out of racial difficulties, which have to be settled before any new principle in legislation or administration, with regard to this country, can be safely accepted. The eminent services which Mr. Roper Lethbridge rendered in London to the Anglo-Indian community who were interested in opposing the Ilbert Bill, and the energy with which, judging by our latest advices from England, he is influencing public opinion against the obnoxious clauses in the Bengal Tenancy Bill, are quite sufficient to render the success of his candidature at Whitby an object of interest to every Anglo-Indian who cares for the interests of this country."

THE revised draft of the Bengal Local Self-Government Bill, as amended in Select Committee, has just been presented. The proposed law seems admirably adapted to the purpose which some malicious people suppose Lord Ripon has had in view throughout, that of wringing extra taxation out of the unhappy taxpayers without bringing all the odium of it on the heads of the Supreme Government. Just as the Bengal Tenancy Bill is really a very clever method—in fact the Ilbert method—of "walking round" the Permanent Settlement; so this Local Self-Government Bill will enable the Government to transfer many of its duties and pecuniary burdens (such as the costs of village education and village roads) to Local Boards, whereby Government will be able to divert to other purposes all the funds that might otherwise be thus locked up. And then, what a happy time Dowd would have, if only Lord Ripon's term of office could be sufficiently extended!

THE multiplication of these office-establishments and chaprâsis under Lord Ripon's fostering hand will be something inexpressibly grand and touching. And great will be His Excellency's popularity on this account—except, perhaps, among the people who will have to find all the money for it, and who may possibly be so foolish as not to appreciate fully their privileges.

THE Commissioners of Division and the Lieutenant Governor—aided, it may be presumed, by Personal Assistants, Under Secretaries, and so forth—will be at the top of this Local Self-Government hierarchy. And if we may judge from the records of the Local Government Board in England, all the time of the Commissioners will be well occupied in learning some of the innumerable devices by which fair excuses for the expenditure of public money can be obtained.

THE Bill is to be circulated for official criticism once more.

It is an ill wind that blows no one good. The scarcity in the Bogra district is to do more for the town of Bogra than all the good intentions of the Viceroy—it is to give it direct railway communication with the Northern Bengal system. It is probable that some of the inhabitants of Bogra will be more pleased with this result, than with that other hallowed arrangement by which they are to be privileged to pay heavy cesses for the glory of having a Local Board.

AN ominous announcement is made in to-day's Calcutta telegram in the Times. The opinions of the local authorities are to be taken, and fresh reports called for, on—among other things—"The Chittagong Tenures." We have often, in these columns, called attention to the dangers which threaten the tea-planters from Lord Ripon's policy. Wherever there may be found any little accumulation of wealth as the result either of thrift or of enterprise, there will the Radical vultures be gathered together with schemes of confiscation or redistribution. And so it comes about that the "Chittagong Tenures" are now to be pounced upon by the Viceroy and Mr. Ilbert.

THE excitement manifested by the Native Press on the subject of the Russian annexation of Merv is a foretaste of what will happen when the final advance on Herat takes place. The Anunda Bazar Patrika says, in that inconsequential style that often means more than appears on the surface, that the people of India do not desire the extinction of the British Government, "but if they express joy on the intended approach of the Russians, the authorities cannot blame them." It is needless to say that the Anunda Bazar Patrika is a warm supporter of Lord Ripon's, and is exceedingly anxious that His Excellency's term of office should be extended—an event at which it would doubtless express even more joy than at "the intended approach of the Russians."

THE Silchar Planters entertained Mr. Keswick, the President of the Defence Association, at breakfast on the 15th March, and presented him with an address. Mr. Keswick received an enthusiastic reception, and the speech of Mr. W. Aitchison, of Doloo, Cachar, in proposing the health of their guest, was received with great applause. Mr. Keswick's reply was characteristic of the man, eloquent, straightforward, and manly.

THE following prospectus has been issued by the Indian Constitutional Association:—

1. This association has become a political necessity in order to resist the introduction into India of dangerous measures altogether unsuited to the country. It has been formed in the interests of good Government, with the especial object of protecting from encroachment the vested rights, landed and otherwise, of all classes of the community. In carrying out this object the association will endeavour to promote such gradual and constitutional changes in the laws and administration as may conduce to the general welfare and prosperity of the country.

2. The association will devote particular attention to all legislative enactments or measures which in any way concern landed property, or affect the interests of those capitalists who are engaged in the development of the trade, manufactures, and resources of the country.

3. The association will watch the operation of the laws in the interests of the classes it represents, and will press on the attention of Government such changes and modifications in them as may appear desirable.

4. It will carefully observe the action of the Legislature with reference to all new legislative projects which may be brought forward by the Government, and take such action upon them, both in England and in India as the circumstances of the case may seem to require.

It will bring to the notice of Government, and, if necessary, lay before Parliament, all administrative abuses which are in any way prejudicial to the interests of the community, or of any class of the community.

5. The association will further endeavour to secure for the non-official community more efficient representation in the legislative councils, provincial and imperial.

6. The first and immediate efforts of the association will be directed to the preservation of the rights of property which are threatened in a special degree by the Bengal Tenancy Bill, and to taking such steps, both in India and in England as the necessities of the occasion may require to render this opposition effectual.

The association will be open to all members of the community, irrespective of nationality, and will serve as a common platform for concerted constitutional action for the preservation of existing rights and privileges.

We have much pleasure in inserting the brief business-like Minutes of the first meeting of this admirable and much-needed Association, held on March 15 in Calcutta:—

1. After some slight alterations had been made in the rules as approved and submitted by the Provisional Committee, at the suggestion of some of the members present, it was proposed by Prince M. Furrakh Shah, and seconded by the Hon. A. B. Miller, "That the rules be passed." Carried unanimously.
2. Proposed by Mr. H. Bell, and seconded by Mr. J. O'B. Saunders, "That H.H. the Maharajah of Darbhanga, H.H. the Maharajah of Hutwa, H.H. the Maharajah of Dumraon, and Prince Mahomed Furrakh Shah to be elected Presidents of the association." Carried unanimously.
3. Proposed by Mr. H. Bell, and seconded by Babu Saligram Sing, "That Maharajah Jotendra Mohun Tagore, Mr. J. J. J. Keswick, and the Hon. A. B. Miller be elected Vice-Presidents of the association." Carried unanimously.
4. Proposed by H.H. the Maharajah of Darbhanga and seconded by Mr. T. H. Wilson, that the following gentlemen be elected members of the Council:—Nawab Vilayet Ali Khan Bahadoor C.I.E., Rajah Padamanund Singh, Rajah Run Bahadur of Tikari, Rajah Harendra Krishna, the Hon. Hurbuns Sohai, Nawab Mir Mahomed Ali, Mr. J. O'B. Saunders, Dewan Rai Prokash Lal Bahadur, Babu Saligram Sing, Babu Bissessur Sing, Mr. H. E. Abbott, Babu Nundan Lal, Mr. H. Bell, Babu Ram Dharee Sahai, Babu Raj Rajessurree Persad Sing, Mr. E. S. Llewellyn, Babu Peary Mohun Mookerjee, Babu Kesub Chunder Acharjee Chowdhry, Mr. H. M. Rustomjee, Mr. J. G. Apear, and Mr. J. C. Macgregor. Carried unanimously.
5. His Highness the Maharajah of Darbhanga took the opportunity of informing the members of the association that Rs. 4,000 had already been subscribed, and that several large sums had been promised, and would shortly be added to the funds of the association.
6. There being no further business before the meeting, it was, after a vote of thanks to the chair, dissolved.

We take the following account of the Calcutta Tea Market from Messrs Carrut and Co's fortnightly report:—

"Small sales were held on the 6th instant, when 3,585 packages passed the hammer, out of 3,802 catalogued. The competition was not very keen, but former prices were about maintained for all classes except common Broken Teas and Fanning, which must be quoted fully ½d. per lb. lower."

The Englishman gives the following account of the Freight Market for the week ending March 21:—

"The transactions we have to report are few in number and lower in rates. Both steamers and ships have had to accept a decline before they could succeed in obtaining cargo. The enquiry for tonnage is as slack as ever, and there seems to be little hope of improvement for some time to come. Three sailing vessels have been fixed during the past week, one for London and two for New York, which more than satisfies the demand for the present. Our unfixed tonnage is increased to about 250,000 tons."

The Times of India gives the following obituary for the week ending March 21:—

"Colonel Young, Controller Military Accounts, Calcutta; Rao Bahadur Keru Laxman Chhatre, late Professor of Mathematics, Deccan College."

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

The reports on the state of the season and prospects of the crops for the week ending the 11th instant are as follows:—

There has been slight rain during the week in two districts of the Bombay Presidency, in four of the North-Western Provinces, and Oudh, in parts of Central India, Rajputana, and the Central Provinces and in parts of Assam. In the Punjab slight rain has fallen throughout the province, with the exception of the Hissar division. Harvesting continues in the Madras Presidency and in Mysore, and standing crops are generally good. The rabi harvest is in progress in the Bombay Presidency and the North-Western Provinces, and has begun in the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, where prospects are on the whole fair. In the Punjab prospects are generally good, except in the Hissar and Umballa divisions, where the crops are suffering from want of rain. In Central India and Rajputana the crops are in fair condition. In Bengal the rabi crops are expected to yield a tolerable average, and sugarcane, which is still being reaped in a few places, is giving a fair outturn. In some districts land is being prepared for next year's crops. In Assam the crop prospects are favourable, and sowing is in progress in the Kamrup district. Cholera is abating in the Madras Presidency, but small-pox continues prevalent in the North Western Provinces and Oudh, and in British Burma. In other provinces the public health is on the whole good. Prices are generally steady, but show an upward tendency in parts of the North Western Provinces and Oudh and Bengal.

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

The following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated April 6:—

"The Select Committee of the Bengal Legislative Council to which the Local Self-Government Bill was referred a year ago has just presented its preliminary report, with the draft of the revised Bill. The new measure differs from the original one chiefly in respect of the provisions for the control of the local bodies. The first Bill contemplated the establishment of a Central Board of Control at Calcutta—a scheme which failed to meet with the approval of the Secretary of State. It is now proposed that the powers which the first Bill gave to a central Board shall be divided between the Lieutenant Governor and the Divisional Commissioners. Each district will have its own district Board; and all, save the less advanced, will have one or more local Boards administering sub-divisions or smaller areas. Where local Boards are established, there the functions of the district Board will be confined to their supervision and control. But if no local Boards exist in a district, then the district Board will be charged with the executive duties as well as with the duty of supervising the Union Committees. The scheme for grouping villages into unions, each with a governing committee, which formed part of the original Bill, is retained.

"The revised Bill will be again circulated for official criticism, and will be taken up by the Council next winter. Meanwhile, in anticipation of its passing experimental elections of Union Committees have been held in some of the more advanced districts near the capital, and the report of Mr. Westmacott, the officer selected to conduct these experiments, is published in the Calcutta Gazette. During the last three months he has sketched out 180 unions, with an average area of twenty square miles, and an average population of 13,142. Each village was visited in turn, the people were collected, the scheme was explained to them, and they were asked to elect representatives for the Union Committee. Mr. Westmacott says that as soon as they understood what was intended, they entered into the plan with intelligence, and generally made admirable selections. There was, he says, a marked absence of ill-feeling between the classes. The leading men of the village, whoever they might be—zemindars, traders, physicians, or substantial ryots—were the men chosen. The Mahomedans showed no objection to the electing of Hindoos. Of 931 elected persons, of whose caste he took notes, 321 were Brahmins, 266 Mahomedans, 104 belonged to the Kayasth, or writer caste sixty seven were Koibortos one was a Christian, and 172 were of various other castes. Most of those elected were fairly substantial men, and the class of day-labourers was almost entirely unrepresented. The funds of these committees will consist of the income from the village pounds, allotments for primary education and village roads, and voluntary contributions. Mr. Westmacott estimates the average income of each union at 740 rupees yearly.

"The scarcity in the district of Bograh threatens to be so severe as to necessitate the institution of relief works. The Lieutenant Governor, who left Calcutta for Darjeeling on Friday last, had arranged to break his journey at Sultempore, in order to confer with the Commissioner at Rajeshaye and the Collector of Bograh regarding these works, which will probably take the form of the construction of a branch railway, about thirty miles long, connecting Bograh with the Northern Bengal line.

"Reports received from the North West Provinces, the Punjab, and Rajpootana show that the scarcity of fodder for cattle is becoming serious in many places; and it is likely that steps will have to be taken by the Government to afford relief. There has been hardly any rain in Northern India since the beginning of the year, and the grass is withered throughout a great part of the country.

"The report of the Select Committee on the Bengal Tenancy Bill will shortly be sent to the Provincial Governments for fresh reports on most points—especially in connection with the Chittagong tenures and the homestead lands. The Bill will probably be referred again to the district officers, and be made the subject of inquiry by specially appointed experts. All criticisms are to be forwarded by September.

"The first section of the Bengal and North Western Railway, from Fyzabad to Baraich, a distance of seventy-two miles, was formally opened last Monday, by Sir Alfred Lyall.

"There has been a gain in the opium sales over the estimates of 5,59,650 rupees up to the 1st inst.

"It is stated that among the Indian exhibits at the approaching Health Exhibition in London will be one by an Indian tea syndicate, representing a miniature tea-garden, and exemplifying the cultivation and manufacture of tea in all its usages.

"It is stated, apparently correctly, that the Ameer has taken the management of the Western Khyber out of the hands of Akbar Khan, the Khan of Lalpore, to whom it was committed by the Indian Government in 1880. Among other rumours, more or less trustworthy, are the following—that the Ameer is going to Herat shortly, that he was greatly comforted on hearing of Ayoub Khan's detention at Teheran, and that he is striving to come to terms with the Mongols and the neighbouring tribes. Dissensions continue in Bajour and Swat and among the Kuki Kheyls; otherwise the frontier is quiet. In view of the Russian annexation of Merv it is important to know the exact strength of the Ameer in Western Afghanistan. According to the Pioneer the garrison of Herat province on January 1 consisted of seven batteries of artillery, four regiments of cavalry, and seven battalions of infantry. The majority of these were stationed in Herat itself; the remainder were holding various posts on the Mershed and Merv roads.

"The Kachyen rebels seem to be again making head in Northern Burmah, and are said to have driven the King's troops into Bhamo. An urgent request has been made for men and money; but no more men are available, as even the city guards of Mandalay have been sent into the field. The Kachyens at first behaved well, sparing unarmed men, women, and children, but as the Burmese troops murdered their adversaries ruthlessly, the rebels have commenced to retaliate, and have committed great atrocities.

"The Rangoon Gazette, in addition to supplying the above news, states that the Burmese troops employed against the Shans are dying in numbers from fever and starvation. Small-pox is widely prevalent in Mandalay, and one of the King's daughters has died of it.

"The newly awakened interest of the native Press in the Central Asian question shows no sign of diminution.

"The Hindoo Patriot says that the time has now come when England should give Russia distinctly to understand that any interference in the affairs of Afghanistan will be regarded as a casus belli.

"The Nubabibhakar, a vernacular newspaper, advises the Government to consolidate its internal strength, by securing the affection of the people.

"The Ananda Bazaar Patrika, another vernacular journal published in Calcutta, says:—"The Russian occupation of Merv may cause anxiety to the people of India, as millions will be spent, for which they will suffer; but there may also be cause for satisfaction to the people if the Government will show some consideration for them. The Government was not strict so long as the Punjab was independent. But since the downfall of that province, the Government have assumed a different attitude towards the people. If the Russians enter Afghanistan, then the Government will see the people in a different light. It will not be able to hold India, unless it secures the goodwill of the people, and confers on them their just rights and privileges. The people of this country are loyally attached to the Government, and do not desire its extinction. But if they express joy on the intended approach of the Russians, the authorities cannot blame them."

"All the courts of justice and public offices under the control of the Bengal Government were closed yesterday, as a mark of respect for the memory of the late Duke of Albany, and there was a general suspension of business in Calcutta."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

MR. SHERER'S NEW NOVEL.*

THE author's name will be sufficient to recommend this book to most Indian readers. But it has been the object of such a remarkable criticism in a weekly London paper, possessed of a certain literary tradition, that we may perhaps have leave to say a few words on the subject. Anonymous reviewing has, no doubt, a great deal to recommend it. The signed articles that are becoming so general at the present day are open to at least two strong objections: if you praise you may appear to be fulsome, if you blame you are sure to be called spiteful. But nothing can be so bad as the sort of article which, while assuming the veiled and judicial dignity of a Vehmgericht, really scolds and misrepresents like an irritated cookmaid. That is what the reviewer of novels for the Athenaeum has done in this case—treating the book as if it were the crude production of an ambitious but ill-furnished novice, hastening to unpack and pour out a crammed mass of notes, and a hastily made collection of irrelevant quotations. Nothing can be a worse description of "Henry Nightingale." Without pretending to a very harrowing series of incidents or a highly woven or startling fabric of fable, it is the work of a sympathetic and mature artist. A record of things seen in a full and varied life; the palimpsest of imagination on a hidden ground of truth. The author is evidently a man looking back on what he remembers, not a youth looking forward to what he hopes. So far, therefore, his book may be wanting in the gaiety and distorting optimism that has sometimes lent a charm to first appearances. But the observation is keen and kindly, and the opposite fault of pessimism is distinctly condemned and brought to confusion. An idea may be formed from a brief summary of the plot and persons.

Henry Nightingale is a young man who has succeeded to the title of Baron Morcott, and the estates appending. But the motto on the title page is—

"Lord of himself, though not of lands."

And this must prepare the cunning expert in romance for what is to come. A strange batch of claimants come forward, remarkable alike in conception and management for their difference from any such group in the "Heir-at-law," and similar stories. Mr. Gomez is a "Eurasian" clerk, whose daughter had been married privately in India to the late peer, and had borne a son before the birth of Henry, who was the offspring of a second marriage. The humours of Mr. Gomez and his family, who come to England to set up their claims against the occupant, are faithfully and ludicrously brought out.

Readers who have been in India cannot fail to be tickled whenever they meet these forlorn oddities, who call London "a very heavy bazaar," complain that the water is bad, and threaten to put in a petition against any one who offends them. But there is one of the Eurasian party to whom a more tragic interest attaches. This is Priscilla, the granddaughter of old Gomez, who becomes a victim to the fascinations of her solicitor, and refuses to go back to India when the others have been bought off by Henry. For the hero does not believe their story, but is prepared to pension them as poor but discreditable kinsfolk. It would be impossible, in the space at our disposal, to do justice to the numerous characters and minute incidents which, as in the real current of life, cross and interlace each other at every shifting turn. But it may be noted that deep interest attaches to this Priscilla, no less than to the solicitor—Albert Perkins by name—whose fortunes, marred by lack of faith and love, aptly illustrate the moral that pessimism is not the law of moral life.

Priscilla ultimately commits suicide, carrying in her desperate arms the fruit of her infatuated love. The first time that brings her in contact with the destined scene of this catastrophe—so characteristic of an Indian female, will be found described at pp. 13 to 15 of the second volume; and the lurid tones in which this picture is painted well supply the hints of tragedy that are to be made good hereafter.

Other passages besides this are marked in our copy of the book; but all are too long for extract. Mr. Sherer does not produce his effects by flashes of lightning, or purple patches, rather by the cool self-possessed "stippling" of the miniature painter.

"Henry Nightingale," to be quite candid, is too long, the plot is hardly enough for the bulk of the book, the style is mannered, and somewhat more elaborate than what suits our modern fastness and snap-dragon ways. But it abounds in curious and very truthful sketches of life in its less obvious aspects; such as could by no possibility occur to a young writer, and must have been the result of close intercourse with all sorts and conditions of men. Lastly, we have compared the mottoes with the chapters which they head, and are able to declare that the critic who found them irrelevant can only be excused from the imputation of bad faith by the plea of wanting intelligence and downright ignorance.

SELECTED ARTICLES.

INDUSTRIAL ARTS OF BOMBAY.

THE Calcutta Exhibition has not, we fear, "advanced India twenty years," as M. Joubert rather sanguinely asserts. But it has interested nearly a million people, and has, we trust, paved the way for a real International Exhibition in Bombay. The Viceroy, we are glad to note, expressed a hope that this would only be the first of a series of exhibitions in India, and that the other great Indian cities would follow the example of Calcutta. Before the subject is forgotten, we should remember that among the minor benefits to be traced to the Calcutta Exhibition are a series of excellent hand-books, dealing with the products, arts and industries of India. By far the most interesting of these to Bombay readers is Mr. Griffith's "Descriptive Catalogue of the Art-ware Contributions from the Bombay Presidency." For the first time we have a full and adequate description of the industrial arts of Western India. Mr. Griffith's descriptions only occur at intervals throughout a long catalogue of exhibits. The catalogue is, of course, useless now the exhibition is over, and the local Government would do well to reprint his remarks in a handy pamphlet. Failing this we have tried to preserve the salient points of what he says in an article entitled, "Mr. Griffiths on the Industrial Arts of Bombay." We have had to considerably abridge the original text, and omit much valuable information about the castes and customs of the different workmen, but in spite of this our article contains so much new information about the different kinds of art-ware to be purchased in the Bombay Presidency, including Baroda, Kutch, and Kattywar, together with so many addresses of workmen to whom orders can be sent direct, that we recommend such of our readers as may be collectors to put it on one side for future reference.

Many of the artistic trades seem to depend almost entirely upon European patronage for support and could be profitably extended if they were only known in England. The sale of Poona figures, for instance, was only started forty years ago; and the annual outturn is still only Rs.10,000. The manufacture of furniture again is of modern date, "having been adopted from the Europeans." This trade is gradually returning to European supervision. The East India Art Manufacturing Company, under the direction of Mr. Wimbridge, the establishment of M. de Forrest at Ahmedabad, and Mr. Crawford's successful School of Industry at Rutnaghery have given an immense impetus to art furniture, and as a result the well-known Bombay blackwood furniture is being superseded altogether among those who can afford anything better. In mentioning the name of M. de Forrest, of Ahmedabad, we are reminded as to how much could be accomplished by Government if they only undertook the serious encouragement of local industries. This one American gentleman has actually succeeded in reviving the almost extinct art of wood-carving. He has established a direct trade with the United States, and the sale of his articles is only limited by the difficulty of finding skilled workmen. Under his auspices Ahmedabad has once more become famous. At Nassick, on the contrary, which used to be the rival of Ahmedabad in wood-carving, the guild of wood-carvers is represented by one old man. In pottery, again, Mr. Terry has started an industry that is capable of much development. His ware is to be found not only in the homes of most Anglo-Indians out here, but is fast becoming a feature in artistic houses at home, and as in the case of M. de Forrest's Ahmedabad establishment, the sales are only limited by the difficulties of production. There is evidently a great future for art manufacture in Western India, if native talent can be turned to account under European supervision. Some of the manufactures, such as arms and shields, are now confined almost entirely to supplying collectors with curios. Arms for this purpose are still made in Cutch. At Ahmedabad a hundred families used to be employed in making shields from the hide of the rhinoceros and the blue-bull. The trade is now in the hands of a father and two sons. Ivory-work, lacquer-ware and horn-work have all run down to a low ebb and subsist mainly on the European patronage that is influenced by the local officials. The manufacture of carpets is now confined to the gaoles. But the beautiful copies of some old Persian carpets discovered at Bijapore, and reproduced at the Yerrowda Gao, show us what can still be done. These particular carpets are now well known, for copies belonging to H. E. Sir James Fergusson, were exhibited in Bombay last year, and other copies attracted much attention at Calcutta. The prices vary from Rs.530 to Rs.160. They would be certain of a good market at home, and are well worth the price.

It is in the metal work that we come to the real native industries that still depend on native support. In Nassick and Poona the copper and brass workers still drive a thriving trade. Their wares do not yet rival those of Benares, but they are already commanding a slight sale in Europe. According to Mr. Griffiths the demand for native gold and silver work is still almost entirely native. The total outturn of silver ware in Kutch amounts, he says, to from four to five lakhs of rupees, a year, of which the Europeans only absorb from Rs.5,000 to Rs.8,000 a year. This must be a deceptive statement, and can only refer to the orders given locally. The sale of Cutch silver to Europeans in Bombay alone must be represented by a very considerable amount. The workers in silk, gold-thread and silver-thread still hold their own. The hand-spinning of cotton, however, is almost a dead industry. Nearly all the weavers now obtain their yarn from the Bombay mills or from Europe. As a curious example of what might be done by a little enterprise, we are told that the ladies of Siam are great patrons of a particular kind of saxe which is only made in Pethapur, a town in the Mahi Kanta. There are very many articles in Mr. Griffiths's list that would have a steady and ready sale if they were only properly introduced to likely customers, but the workmen are too poor to look for buyers. In most cases they require an advance of money before they can obtain the raw material. A paternal Government like ours might well devote a little money to the encouragement and development of arts that will otherwise die out. If Mr. Wimbridge, and Mr. de Forrest, and Mr. Terry can make money out of Indian art manufactures, there is no reason why the Government should not in time recover any money they might invest in assisting the workmen to send their goods to likely markets. Mr. Griffiths's notes are full of bits of curious out-of-the-way information. Among other things he has something new to tell us about turbans. The stricter Hindoos still wear the orthodox turban, folded after the required fashion by the professional turban-folder. Of late years, however, an imitation turban has come into vogue, which, instead of taking fifty to eighty yards of stuff, only takes about fifteen yards, the rest of the bulk being supplied with paper and rags. His remarks, however, are most useful when they point to the possible development of some old industry, or when they describe some ware or fabric which, however lightly regarded here, would exactly suit the artistic taste that is a present raging at home.—Times of India.

THE PUNJAB EDUCATION DEPARTMENT.

An injustice to the Punjab Education Department would appear to be threatening. The appointment of Mr. Denzil Ibbetson, a member of the Civil Service to officiate as Director of Public Instruction is contemplated, over the heads of the entire department. Mr. Ibbetson is, no doubt, an able man who has done Government service in his own line, but that is no reason why he should be taken from his legitimate sphere and placed at the head of a department in which he does not appear to have served, and of which he can have little or no practical experience. This, of itself should have been sufficient to have made such an appointment impossible but there are other and much more serious issues involved, and these issues are of general interest, as well as of importance to the services at large. The up-country papers say Mr. Ibbetson is a comparatively young civilian, and the department will resent his intrusion, but "nevertheless it would be difficult to find a better man for the post." It is always easy to find a reason for supporting a particular appointment, but the persons who are injured by it, and the public who are interested, are likely to take a different view of the matter. The question in all these cases is, or at least ought to be, not whether the man about to be preferred is as good, or in some respects a little better, than another, whose claims point him out as the natural successor to an appointment, but whether the former has claims so far superior to those to be passed over that there can be no possible question or doubt as to the right thing to do. It is more than a purely personal question, but, even as a personal question, injustice ought not to be done. The first thing which strikes most people is that the members of a particular service or department should have a preferential claim to promotion in that department. They have given themselves up to it; they have given the best years of their lives to it, and their best energies. They have taken the good and the bad, and their experience alone of the special work to be done must of necessity be greater than that of any outsider, however able. Many men, too, devote their leisure to the service of the Government and the public in some way or other, but length of service, special training, experience, and voluntary good work all go for nothing when an outside appointment is made. Individuals are disappointed and disheartened, claims and experience are set aside as of no account, the business of a whole department, and the public, who are chiefly concerned, consequently suffer. For it is contrary to human nature to expect that, when claims are thus set aside, the claimants will continue to take the same interest in their work, or give the public the same return as if they were treated with due and proper consideration. Departmental prizes are few in number, and they should never be given away to persons without any kind of claim upon them. It is always easy to say one man is better than another, for there are no two men in all respects alike. It depends very much, however, who the appraiser is. What may appear important in the eyes of one dispenser of patronage may be of less consequence in the opinion of another. One Governor may prefer a brilliant report-writer, or one possessed of some special qualification, while another would decide in favour of lengthened and approved service, and the more solid acquirements of experience and knowledge of the duties to be performed. When men are pitted against each other in this way, and there is very little to choose between them, the only decision to arrive at is to give the preference to him who has the most service and experience in the department, provided, of course, that he is in the same rank, and otherwise qualified. Such a course is not only the fairest to individuals and the department, but, in nine cases out of ten, would result in the best appointment. The Lieutenant Governor, in one of the debates on the Ibbert Bill, made some excellent observations on this subject. Mr. Rivers Thompson pointed out that seniority was the rule of the service, and, unless something very serious could be laid against a man, he could not be passed over when a question of promotion arose. If a man's conduct was unsatisfactory, or he had been proved unfit for the duties of the post to which he aspired, there would be good reason for passing him over, but if not, and he had won his way fairly to the position which entitled him to look for further promotion, he could not be denied it. Anything else would be unfair to the individual, and to the whole service of which he was a member, and the result would be to engender dissatisfaction and distrust. This is only common fairness. Unless an appointment is of an exceptional character, requiring for the due discharge of its duties qualities of an extraordinary kind, it is hardly ever necessary to go outside the department, and there are hardly any offices, except the highest, where the application of the ordinary rule would not meet the case. Nothing short of a paramount necessity should therefore cause a breach of the rule. In the case of a department like the Educational, whose members are specially selected and trained for a particular kind of work, supersession becomes specially galling and hard to bear, for it is not merely that promotion is stopped, but the introduction of an outsider amounts to a verdict of incompetence in all connected with the department. The smaller and more special the service is, does this become the result. It would be quite safe to say that there must be several men in the Punjab Educational Service qualified for the post of director; and in all probability the senior member of the service is fully fitted for it. Upon what ground then can an outside appointment be defended? Mr. Ibbetson is said to have rendered good service, and to have given great satisfaction, in connection with the census operations in the Panjab. But the connection between a numbering of the people and public education is not altogether clear, and have the Punjab educational officers not done equally good service in their own line, and are they entirely without distinction in any way? The reverse may very well be the case. If a man has done good service, or distinguished himself in a particular instance, he should have his reward in due time, but not at the expense of other people and to the possible injury of the public interests. It is a bad plan to pick out a particular man and say that for a particular reason he ought to be preferred to all others, irrespective of the claims and qualifications of all comers. These claims may far outweigh the particular service or qualification sought to be recognised, and the person or persons injured would in the majority of cases, for all practical purposes, be as well fitted for the office as the selected candidate. As regards minor appointments, the rule of seniority probably prevails pretty generally, but if there is anything like a keen contest for a superior office it is, we suspect, very much a question of the most interest and the best backing, and all that could be said for the successful candidate would be contained in the general observation that "it would be difficult to find a better man for the post." We are not disposed to admit the "difficulty," and we doubt very much if the real merits and claims of individuals are thought of on such occasions, or the true interests of the public considered. —Englishman.

THE DUTCH AT THE CALCUTTA EXHIBITION.

There must have been a good many of the visitors to the Calcutta Exhibition who have more or less vivid, but always pleasant, recollections of the Hague and the flower-environed road which leads from the capital to Scheveningen. The stately mansions of the East Indian Nabobs in the Dutch metropolis, and the tasteful villas in its neighbourhood will, not improbably, have been recalled to their minds, as they have been to ours, by the Netherlands Indian Court at the Exhibition, with its abundant display of the valuable produce—the coffee, the sugar, and spices—from which so many princely fortunes have been and continue to be derived. Though the great days of Holland are past and she has lost many of her colonies, her territories in Asia still afford an immense field for her enterprise and the employment of her capital; and, in proportion to the population of the two countries, are little, if at all, inferior in importance to the vast Indian Empire of Great Britain.

Among the islands of the Indian Archipelago, Java, in Malay, Yava, Dwipa or Banley Island, the most valuable of the Dutch possessions in the East, is not the largest, being surpassed in size by Borneo, Sumatra, and New Guinea; but in every respect it is the most important of them all. It has passed through the most remarkable vicissitudes, has been the scene of the most eventful occurrences, and possesses the noblest memorials of bygone splendour. In natural beauty it rivals the most-favoured regions of the world. Its vegetation is even more varied and luxuriant than that of the "resplendent" Ceylon. Through the mildness of its climate and the industry of its people, it possesses a richer store of valuable productions than almost any country of equal extent can boast of. Its ricefields make it the granary of the Archipelago, and its coffee and sugar plantations are a perpetual source of wealth to Holland. Its population, which is larger than that of all the neighbouring islands together, amounted, in 1873, to 17,855,840; and it speaks well for the prosperity enjoyed by its people under the paternal rule of the Dutch Government, that between 1816 and 1873 their number had nearly quadrupled. The Netherlands Indian court at the Exhibition, though somewhat limited in extent, gave an excellent idea of the rich and varied products of the island, of the manufactures of its native inhabitants, and of its interesting antiquities. Foremost amongst the last is the Boro Bador, a magnificent temple in the Kadu district of Java, dedicated, as the name implies, to the great Buddha. This temple is the finest specimen of Buddhist architecture in existence. Externally as well as internally it is loaded with ornamentation. In spite of the ravages of time, there are still remaining in the building not less than four hundred life-sized figures of Buddha, with a much larger number of smaller statues of the god. The bas-reliefs and rich carvings constitute a wealth of decorative art. The temple is in the form of a quadrangle pyramid, 124 feet high, by 561 feet broad at the base. It rises in a succession of eight immense terraces, which are led up to by flights of steps. Some experts hold that its date must be assigned to the tenth century, whilst others are of opinion that it is of a good deal more recent construction. A remarkably fine set of engravings and photographs of this stupendous monument were to be seen in the Netherlands Indian courts, and must have been full of interest to all students of archaeology who visited it.

Examples of the agricultural productions of Netherlands India constituted, however, the most prominent feature of the court, and the progress made by a European people like the Dutch, possessing a reputation as successful colonisers, and commercial instincts as strong as our own, in developing the resources of their Asiatic dominions, cannot but have excited great interest and curiosity amongst Anglo-Indians. Coffee has always held a prominent place among the exports of Java. At the exhibition it was represented by about 180 samples, some fifty of which were from Sumatra; and the awards of the jurors, published on Monday last, tend to show that it maintains its ancient reputation. The exports from Java in 1883 amounted to nearly 90,000 tons. It may not be out of place to remind the reader that coffee was introduced into Java from Arabiar about two centuries ago, and that it is a curious but well-established fact that all the coffee which is now exported from the Brazils and the West Indies is the progeny of a single plant which was most probably obtained from the Botanical Gardens at Amsterdam, where it had been first imported from Batavia. The production of sugar has been increasing most rapidly of late years, and the exports in 1883 exceeded 300,000 tons. The extraction from the cane is carried on in large factories with the most approved modern processes. The cultivation of tea has not made the same gigantic strides in Java as it has done in our Eastern districts. But there was a goodly array of samples, the produce of the island, at the Exhibition; and the success which has attended this industry there is indicated to some extent by the award of one of the gold medals, which, considering the large number of exhibits in this class, have not been distributed at all lavishly by the jurors. In the matter of indigo, also, Java claims a special distinction with regard to quality, the only gold medal given in this department having been awarded to the Netherlands Court. The favourable conditions under which this dye is produced, and the great care bestowed upon its manufacture, may be gathered from the fact that the sample of Java indigo, which obtained the first prize at the exhibition was, it is understood, valued at Rs. 370, or Rs. 50 above the price of the finest Bengals during the past seasons. A gold medal has also been awarded to the Deli Maatschappij for their exhibits of Sumatra tobacco. The extension of the cultivation of tobacco on the East coast of Sumatra has been very rapid, and is becoming exceedingly important. In 1865 the exports to Holland consisted of only 189 bales, valued at £3,330, whilst in 1882 the shipments to the mother country had risen to 100,000 bales, worth £1,810,000. The narcotic plant is also largely grown in Java, especially in the Kadu district. The Netherlands Indian possessions, it is almost needless to say, have always been famous for their delicious spices, and continue to occupy the first rank amongst the countries producing these valuable articles. The cultivation of cinchona bark has also flourished under the fostering care of the Government; and we notice that 1,023,434 lbs. were shipped from Java last year. In textile fabrics, and especially in the richly embroidered silks, for which the gorgeous East is famous, Netherlands India vies with Hindustan. The exhibits of the kind in this court were very superior, the gold having a very rich appearance, without any of the tinselly effect belonging to second-class work of this description. Very interesting also were the native cotton prints, with their tasteful colours and designs. Unfortunately, this beautiful industry, like our gossamer muslins from Dacca, is declining, as it cannot maintain its ground against the cheap prints of Europe. Two beautifully made blocks of ribbon copper used by the Javense cotton printers were also exhibited, and have been purchased by Mr. Kipling, the Director of the Government School of Art at Lahore. The multifarious uses of the bamboo are proverbial and Dutch ingenuity has added another to the long list of purposes to which it may be applied. A firm in Batavia has employed it in the manufacture of hats with such success that they have produced an article which has all the appearance of the finest Panama straw. We have still to mention the marvellously complete set of maps, which were one of the ornaments of the court. They have been pronounced by experts here to be of the highest excellence, and have obtained the highest award. Amongst the exhibits were many ethnological objects of interest, illustrating the various races of the Netherlands Indian Archipelago, their mode of life, &c.; but it is impossible, for want of space, to do more than merely allude to them on this occasion.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

LORD RIPON'S SPEECH AT THE CLOSING OF THE EXHIBITION.

SELDOM has the ruler of a country such an opportunity of delivering himself of statesmanlike views as fell to the lot of Lord Ripon on Monday last, on the occasion of closing the Calcutta International Exhibition. It was a golden opportunity which, had it been turned to good account, might have done something to retrieve his character for statesmanship. But instead of this was found only a bald and wearisome resumé of facts, strung together without fact or skill. The closing address of the Viceroy never rose above the eloquence of the parish vestry. We were told, it is true, of the beauties of the Indian Courts, and a brief allusion was made to the machinery department, which of itself should have supplied a text for a goodly discourse, whilst the well-worn subject of the Southern Colonies was briefly touched upon without a shadow of a new idea. Upon the only occasion when his Excellency ventured upon originality he bungled irretrievably. The Viceroy ventured to read a lecture to British exhibitors, who, according to his notion of the fitness of things, have been sadly wanting in that understanding of Indian wants which he expected them to have had. His Excellency told his audience that, whilst the needs of the wealthy had been abundantly studied in the contributions to the British Courts, the requirements of the poorer classes, and especially of the cultivators of the soil, have been altogether ignored, for that not one of the manufacturers of Great Britain has done what the Agricultural Department of India has failed in doing—viz., to “supply the wants of the agricultural classes of this country, and provide them with implements calculated to supersede the rude and primitive instruments which they now use.” Those civil servants who have passed a long time in India and have the control of the Agricultural Department, within whose province it might fairly be presumed such matters came, have as yet failed to indicate what is wanted in this respect, but his Excellency is good enough to declare that “Jones, Brown, and Robinson,” of Wolverhampton, and “Smith and Tomkins,” of Birmingham, who have never been present in Bengal, never away from their busy factories, have been wanting in their duty to the Indian ryot, inasmuch as they have not designed improved agricultural implements which Lord Ripon declares it to be doubtful if the natives of this country would use if they had them.

We do not hesitate to assure his Excellency that if those whose special duty it is to look into such matters will indicate the particular implements needed by those amongst whom they are living, the manufacturers of great Britain will lose no opportunity of supplying as large a quantity as the people of this country can take. The planters of Jamaica and Ceylon, when they took to the industries of sugar and coffee planting, devised the proper form of hoe and axe required on their plantations; they employed a native blacksmith to prepare models, rough indeed, but sufficient for the purpose, to indicate the nature of their wants in the matter of plantation tools; these were despatched to England as patterns for the guidance of home manufacturers; and the result has been that planters in these colonies are well supplied with the more perfect and most suitable implement for their work.

What the planters of the eastern and western colonies have done, let the agricultural bureau of India do, and if it have not within its ranks men of sufficient practical knowledge to undertake this necessary task, the sooner it is strengthened in its rank and file by the importation of skilled agriculturists from one of the agricultural colleges, the better for India. It is impossible to congratulate the Viceroy on the wisdom and ability of his reminder when he said:—“I believe that those who have skill and the capital to devise improved agricultural implements would find a fair field, as time goes on, for the sale of articles of that description in this country. I mention this now in the hope that before another exhibition is held here, those who are likely to become exhibitors hereafter will turn their attention to the subject.” It is not exhibitors, but the workers on this side who must be up and doing in the only direction and in the only way in which the Indian ryot can be efficiently helped in his struggle with circumstances so opposed to his prosperity. Lord Ripon has lost what was a golden opportunity, and in doing so has illustrated more forcibly the width of the gulf which separates theoretical from practical statesmanship. — Englishman.

THE NEW RUSSIAN GOVERNOR OF MERV.

MAJOR OLICHANOFF is, we read, appointed Governor of Merv. Let us try and picture what this fact, seen through the lights of Indian experience, represents. Major Olichanoff is, then, it might be imagined from his name, a thoroughly orthodox Russian—decorated, doubtless, like a Tel-el-Kebir hero. He wears long whiskers, à la Skobelev, speaks French, and plays écarté. He goes to Merv direct from St. Petersburg with a posse of Kossacks, and will begin to administer justice and to rule according to regulation — by us Anglo-Indians supposed to be the “knout” in action. We base our ideas of Russian rule at Merv on the mode of the proceedings of our Deputy Commissioners on our frontier. Will Major Olichanoff bother the Mervites to sanitise, or to educate, or to litigate? Well, then, to continue our speculation, doubtless this coveted post has been bestowed on the scion of some noble family, who when his term of office is ended, will return to Moscow or St. Petersburg with lots of old china carpets, and other curiosities, to put up in the ancestral hall. Do not we return home and put up Afghan shields, kanjirs, tulwars, &c., in our ancestral homes, or in our little nooks in Kensington? But to such as consider Russian ways and means, and who are acquainted with their system, this governorship of Merv implies more than the fact as recorded by us reveals. Let us then take Major Olichanoff to pieces—literally we mean. To do this we begin by paring away the Ruski affix and reducing the patronymic to Olichan. Now, adopting the maxim of the great Napoleon, “Gratter le Russe et vous découvrirez le Tartare,” we, by recourse to Mr. Hunter’s transliterating system, arrive at the conclusion that in Indian “Olichanoff” would be written simply as Ali Khan! Who then is Ali Khan? Is he or is he not a certain Caucasian officer who served under Skobelev at Geok Tepe? Did he hold a command in a Kossack regiment in 1882? Was he not presented to some English travellers in Baku in October the same year? Probably our Indian Foreign Office knows all about him, and may enlighten us.

Another fact requires appreciation. If we are correct in our conjectures the nominated Governor of Merv is a Musulman. This is not without importance as affording a clue to the polity of Russian advance toward Afghanistan. It is not improbable, however, but that Ali Khan’s notions of Islam would scandalise the khidmutgarian orthodoxy of India, for not only does Olichanoff, but also other Musulman Caucasian officers, such as Mehtichoulichanoff, Verdichoulichanoff, &c., dress, eat, drink, talk, and live like Russians, while their ideas and minds get as Russianised as their names?

As a parallel, let us imagine that the Queen-Empress appointed Sabagar Hari Singh or Jani Singh Governor of the Panjgur or Jalt. According to Russian ideas this should be described as the appointment of Major Harrison or Major Jamieson to the important post of Governor of Panjgur. And were our intentions towards Persia of such an absorbing nature as those of Russia towards Afghanistan, that place might be important. The parallel, however, ceases when we consider that neither Hari Singh, nor Jani Singh, however brave and loyal, are ever likely to develop into Harrison and Jamieson, though the Russian system, aided hitherto, we must confess, by the absence of no very marked racial distinctions of a physical nature, has succeeded in transmogrifying Kahnaks, Caucasians, Georgians, Kirghis, and Armenians, into eminent Russians, and Ali Khan into Major Olichanoff, Governor of Merv. — Englishman.

THE CAVAGNARI MEMORIAL FUND.

THE Indian Daily News says:—“The subscriptions appear to have been neither very numerous nor very liberal. The proposal was to raise Rs.4,000 for a memorial to consist—1st, of a coloured window in the Kohat Church; 2nd, a portrait in oils to be hung up in some public institution in Kohat; and a ‘Cavagnari Scholarship,’ open to schools (Government and other) in the Peshawar and Derajat Divisions. This amount, it was hoped, would be raised in the Punjab alone, by subscriptions limited to Rs.25 each. Up to date, however, only a sum slightly in excess of one half of that required has been collected. Of this, again, considerably more than half has been subscribed outside the limits of the Punjab; in the Hyderabad Assigned Districts (over Rs.820), Quetta, and the North West Provinces, assisted by officers of the army unconnected with the Punjab. Should the full amount of Rs.4,000 not be subscribed, a portion of the above proposal must necessarily be abandoned—a result which would be a matter of regret.”

MILITARY PAY.

A PATERNAL Government has lately ruled that the British soldier in India shall receive his pay at the Government rate of exchange. Formerly the pay that he received in England was, when he came out here, paid to him at the rate of two shillings and a half-penny per rupee. He now gets it at 1s. 8d., and so each month he gets a very appreciable addition to his pay—in the case of a private (in a month of thirty days) two rupees, and somewhat more, of course, in the non-commissioned grades.

This is, no doubt, as it should be. A man enlists at home for a shilling a day, and he has a right to expect the value of that shilling in whatever country he may be serving. Before this new order was published, however, soldiers were allowed to remit money home to the extent of their full monthly pay at the rate of 2s. ½d. per rupee. This was also fair, as this was the rate at which he was paid his English pay. Now, however, that he is paid at 1s. 8d. per rupee, he is only allowed to remit home at that rate, and there is no doubt that this is fair. But Government has issued another order with respect to soldiers' savings bank accounts, which is likely to cause much discontent, and that is that, after the 1st of April, all savings bank deposits are to be remitted not at 2s. ½d. as formerly, but at the new rate. At first sight this does not appear unfair; but on looking into it, it becomes apparent that it is an actual hardship. The order to be just in its action should have been that all money deposited in the savings bank after the 1st of April could only be remitted at the new rate, viz., 1s. 8d., because the money which was in the savings bank before the publication of the new order (Feb. 13) was actually worth to the soldier 2s. 0½d. for each rupee deposited. Why, it may be asked, then do not those men who are discontented at the order remit the whole of their savings before April 1? Because only a very limited sum can be remitted monthly. A typical case of the unfairness of the action of this order is the following. A man came out with his regiment to India, say, last year. In England he had some £20 in the savings bank. This was all transferred to India with the regimental accounts, not at the favourable rate, but at 2s. ½d. per rupee. So instead of £20 he has in the bank in India Rs. 195 and a fraction. After April 1 this, instead of representing £20, will represent about £16-5. So the man has actually lost over £3-15 without any fault whatever of his own. It is hardly conceivable that it is the intention of the authorities that our soldiers, who at the best are badly paid, should be mulcted in this manner. There are similar cases by hundreds throughout the British service in India. If, as we said before, Government would rule that all money already in the savings bank was still to be considered worth 2s. ½d. per rupee, but that all deposits made after the issue of the notification were to be only worth 1s. 8d. per rupee, there would be no just cause for grumbling.

Having said so much on the subject of the monetary affairs of the British soldier, it is not out of place to touch on a similar subject with regard to British officers in this country. Years ago, when the rate of an officer's pay was last fixed, his pay was divided into various parts—his English pay proper, tentage, batta, &c. &c. It is with the first of these headings we have to concern ourselves. In those palmy days a rupee was worth half-a-crown, and his English pay in India was calculated at that rate, it evidently being the intention of the authorities, in those days, that he should receive in India the actual Indian worth of his English pay. A lieutenant's pay—6s. 6d. a day, or £9 15s. a month in a month of thirty days—represented out here in those days Rs. 78, and that is about the sum that a lieutenant who in England would draw 6s. 6d. a day now gets monthly as the equivalent of his English pay. This he not unnaturally considers unfair. An English officer's English pay should represent the pay he would draw as a regimental officer at home. All other allowances, of course, are Indian allowances, and it is but just they should be paid in Indian money. But his English pay proper should be paid at the Government rate of exchange for the year, or else he should be allowed to draw it in sterling money in England. The difference it would make to a lieutenant would in the present year be very considerable as he would get his £9-15 a month at 1s. 7½d. instead of at 2s. 6d., that is, about Rs. 118 per mensem instead of Rs. 78. It is not as if the British officer had ever been able to remit home at a favourable rate. Although his British pay has been calculated at 2s. 6d. per rupee, his remittances are now at 1s. 7½d. So if a lieutenant remits home that portion of his emoluments which is his English pay proper—viz., Rs. 78, he receives for it £6-8-4½, actually £3-6-7½ less than what his so called English pay in India is supposed to represent. There is no doubt that those who have the control of the Government purse-strings are able to regulate to their own advantage the finances of their employes in a manner which no private individual would ever for a moment do. And the army is a particularly tasy body of men to experiment upon, as any combined movement or representation on their part is strictly forbidden by regulation. There is not a single British officer in India who does not feel that he is being hardly treated in this matter of pay; but he has no redress, and so accepts the inevitable. We trust, however, that it will not always be so. We hope that the British officer may some day be paid his English pay proper at a fair and just rate of exchange. It would be a great boon to a very large number of faithful servants of Government who are not blessed with very large emoluments.—Bombay Gazette.

THE RUSSIANS AT MERV.

The Indian Daily News says:—"The story of the dismissal of General Tcherniaeff is just one of those clever and specious tricks with which the Russian Foreign Office loves to befool the world and England especially. Merv has fallen, and as a consequence, Russia has to make a new protestation of her tenderness for the susceptibilities of the British Government, and a new proof of the exceeding desire of the Czar that nothing shall be done which shall give offence to England. Hence Tcherniaeff is recalled, and will probably be given some new and highly honourable appointment in Poland or Armenia, and Russia will pursue her schemes and plans exactly as if Tcherniaeff had never existed. The only surprising thing about the matter is the audacious way in which Russia trades upon the simplicity and gullibility of the English. The General's offence was the drawing up of a plan for the invasion of India—a very terrible offence indeed; for, of course, the friendly Czar, the pink of friendship and the mirror of promise-keepers, could never contemplate any such enterprise; and yet Schoboleff himself as soon as he had mustered Geok Tepe, looked towards Merv, and, as we know, left among his papers a memorandum on the very problem of which Tcherniaeff has drawn up a paper solution. As for a plan for the invasion of India, the first was drawn up in the time of Catherine II. Alexander I. lent an ear to a scheme of Napoleon's on the same subject. Field Marshal the Count de Berg drew up an elaborate scheme for the invasion of India, which has furnished a base for much military speculation amongst Russian officers. Tcherniaeff's offence is such a very common one that his punishment is an absurd and ridiculous attempt to induce England to accept the fall of Merv as if nothing whatever had happened, and as if Russia at Merv and Samarcand had no more than Russia at Orenburgh and Baku. Verily, St. Petersburg must have a ripe contempt for London when so shallow and stale a trick is considered good enough to amuse the English Government and people."

The new Inspector General of Ordnance, Bengal, will be with his office permanently located at Calcutta, most probably in the Military Account Department new offices in Koilah Ghaut-street. Major R. F. Lewis, will, it is stated, be appointed Inspector General of Ordnance, Bengal, on Colonel Hughes being appointed Director General of Ordnance.

The Government of India is considering the proposal of the Commander in Chief to hold the camp of exercise for all India at Poona next cold season. The military authorities at Bangalore have been requested to submit the scale of tent equipage allowed at the recent camp of exercise at Bangalore. The 4th Pioneers are proceeding with the demolition of the fort. A fortified wall is being erected round Agram Barracks, as a place of refuge in the event of an outbreak.

The appointment of Major Hutchinson to the Adjutant General's Department, Simla, as head of the Musketry Department, is not viewed by the army generally in a favourable light, as that officer has never held the appointment of regimental instructor or circle inspector of musketry. It is a job. This, however, is not his fault. Major Hutchinson is a very popular officer, and has won golden opinions as an adjutant and commandant of Volunteers.

Furlough to Europe has been granted to the following officers:—Captain Kennedy, Staff Corps, second assistant to the Political Resident at Aden (officiating third assistant to the Political agent, Kattywar), one year on private affairs; Brigade Surgeon Partridge, I.M.D., one year on medical certificate; and Surgeon Major R. Caldecott, I.M.D., in medical charge, 2nd Regiment Central India Horse, and Political Agency, Gooena, 286 days on private affairs.

The movement of troops next cold season will be on a large scale. It is stated that there was some objection raised by the Government of India on the score of expense, but the list had been most carefully revised before being submitted for approval by the Commander in Chief, and it was deemed unwise to recast it. As nearly all the movements will be by route march, there will not be a heavy railway bill, and the beneficial results gained by marching will more than counter-balance any extra expense which may be incurred by moving so many regiments. Last year's relief was a very small one, and hence the increase this year.

Furlough out of India has been granted to the following officers:—Lieutenant Colonel Palmer, temporary Superintending Engineer, Punjab (one year and 151 days); Lieutenant Colonel Gordon, Commandant 20th (Duke of Cambridge's Own) Native Infantry (91 days); Captain Webb, Adjutant, Calcutta Volunteer Rifle Corps (243 days); Lieutenant Pollard, 7th Bengal Cavalry (273 days); Surgeon Major King, Superintendent Royal Botanical Gardens, Calcutta (182 days); Surgeon Major Marsy (one year and 166 days); Surgeon Major Hatchell (182 days); and Surgeon Major Hancock (one year). Extension of furloughs have been granted to Captain Hadow, Bengal S. C. (three months); Captain H. A. Yorke, R. E., (six months); and Surgeon Major Hendley (six months).

One of the prizes of the service, the post of Adjutant General in India, becomes vacant in October. With one exception this appointment has been held by an officer of the British service, a colonel with the honorary rank of major general, that exception being the case of Colonel Lumden, now Major General Sir P. S., who belongs to the Staff Corps; he held it from 1874 to 1879. Sir George Greaves came almost direct from the Horse Guards, the stepping-stone being Cyprus; he having vacated the appointment of assistant adjutant general at the Horse Guards in July, 1878, becoming chief of the staff at Cyprus on the 22nd, and chief secretary to Government on August 1, a post which he held till June, 1879, coming out to India in the October following. Since 1867 Sir George has had no regimental experience, having been employed continually on the staff; and previous to that year he was deputy assistant quartermaster general in New Zealand for four years. He entered the service in 1849. Rumour has given the succession to the appointment which Sir George Greaves fills so worthily to an officer, also a protégé of the Horse Guards at present in this country, Brigadier General Elles, in command of the Nag-pore brigade at Kamptee. Rumour, in this instance, is believed to be correct.

The following postings have been made in the Native Army:—Lieutenant Colonel A. L'Estrange Holmes to officiate as squadron commander, 1st B. C., vice Lieutenant Colonel R. Morris, on furlough; Lieutenant Colonel Kauntze, officiating commandant, 7th B. G., to officiate as commandant, 4th B. C., vice Colonel Pendergast, on furlough; Lieutenant Colonel Ross, officiating squadron commander, 10th B. C., to act in the same capacity in the 10th Bengal Lancers, vice Lieutenant Colonel Barrow, on leave; Lieutenant Colonel Byres, squadron commander, 13th Bengal Lancers, to be 2nd in command, vice Lieutenant Colonel Pennington, appointed commandant of the 14th Bengal Lancers, and to continue to officiate as commandant, vice Lieutenant Colonel Macmaghten, on furlough; Major Beecher to continue to officiate as 2nd in command, vice Major Ryves; Major Macmullen, squadron commander to move up in grade succession, and Captain G. E. Deane to be squadron commander; Major Skinner, 2nd in command, 3rd N. I., to be commandant, vice Major Gordon, deceased; Major Elliot, wing commander, 4th N. I., to be 2nd in command, vice Major Douglas, deceased; Major Dransom, officiating 2nd in command, 6th N. I., to be 2nd in command, vice Major Handcock, seconded, and Captain Birch to be wing commander, vice Major Atkins, retired; Major Meiklejohn, wing commander, 20th Native Infantry, to be 2nd in command, vice Colonel Bartleman, removed; and Captain Irwin, wing officer, to be wing commander; Colonel Robertson, 2nd in command, 44th Native Infantry, to be commandant, vice Lieutenant Colonel Rowcroft, deceased; Captain Ridgeway, V.C., to be 2nd in command, and Major Macgregor to be wing commander; Major Hay, 2nd in command 4th Goorkhas, to be commander, vice Colonel Turton, deceased; Major Mainwaring to be 2nd in command, and Major Rogers, wing commander. It will be seen from the above that the healthy system of regimental promotion has been carried out as far as possible.

PRODUCE MARKETS.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

SUGAR.—A dull tone prevails in this market, and beet has sold at a decline of $\frac{1}{4}$ d. on yesterday's prices. Nothing has transpired in West India sugar. In the Clyde market, for pieces, a fair business. Quotations irregular.

COFFEE.—At the Dutch Trading Company's sale to-day Java went at $\frac{1}{4}$ c. to $\frac{1}{2}$ c. under valuation, but the market here is steady, and 233 casks 96 barrels and bags Plantation Ceylon by auction went at 1s. advance—small, 57s. 6d. to 60s.; good middling to middling, 61s. 6d. to 65s.; good middling, 66s. 6d. to 70s. 6d.; fine home trade, 77s. to 81s. 6d.; bold, 83s. to 88s.; superior, 90s. to 92s.; 50 cases 996 bags East India showed last week's rates—pale faded low medium to bold, 56s. 6d. to 65s.; colory medium, 63s. to 63s. 6d.; bold 70s. to 74s.; small in proportion; 11 casks 179 barrels and bags Jamaica, good to fine ordinary, 45s. to 49s. 6d. per cwt. Brazil is steady.

White pepper is firm; 391 bags Singapore withdrawn, and 250 bags London-made sold at high prices—fine, 11d. to $11\frac{1}{2}$ d.; mixed, $10\frac{1}{2}$ d.; small, $9\frac{1}{2}$ d.; broken and dust, $9\frac{1}{2}$ d. to $9\frac{1}{2}$ d. Zanzibar cloves $\frac{1}{2}$ d. lower at $\frac{1}{4}$ d. to $\frac{1}{2}$ d. for middling to fair; $\frac{1}{4}$ d. for good; a lot or two, $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; 28 bags Amboyna bought in $\frac{1}{4}$ d. Bold nutmegs rather lower; Penang, 65s. 3s. 4d. to 3s. 5d.; 82s. 2s. 6d. to 2s. 7d.; of 109 packages only few lots placed; 727 bags Pimento sold firmly at $2\frac{3}{4}$ d. to $2\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. Cochin vinger rather lower; of 1,525 packages one-third sold—ordinary hard to fair rough, 41s. to 45s.; small to medium, part, 51s. to 52s.; rather bold cut, 58s. to 58s. 6d.; small ordinary, very old import, 45s.; 440 cases cassia lignea part sold 27s. 6d.

SAGO.—Small is cheaper, excepting the fine; 2,100 bags chiefly sold at—brownish, 11s. to 11s. 6d.; fine, 13s. 6d. 811 bags Sarawak flour bought in, 11s. to 11s. 6d. 1,988 bags pearl tapioca chiefly sold at easier rates—seed, 11s. to 11s. 6d.; medium 11s. 6d.; few lots, 12s.; ballet, 13s. per cwt.; 434 bags flake brought in $1\frac{1}{2}$ d. to $1\frac{1}{4}$ d. per lb.

RICE.—Business has been done in Siam at 8s. $1\frac{1}{2}$ d.

SHELLAC.—Sales reported in A. C. garnet at higher rates.

JUTE.—A limited business has been done to-day.

COTTON.—A good business has taken place at firm prices. American futures close steady at $6\frac{1}{4}$ d. to 6 1/8d. Sales about 2,500 bales, including Tinnivelly, at 5d. to 5 1/8d.; Bengal, $4\frac{1}{4}$ d. to $4\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. For arrival, Tinnivelly, October, Cape, February-March, Suez $5\frac{1}{4}$ d. to 5 1/8d.; for good fair, $5\frac{1}{4}$ d. for fully good fair. Forward delivery, American, April-May, 6 1/4d. to 6 1/2d.; July-August, 6 1/2d. to 6 3/4d. per lb. for middling l.m.c. Messrs. Robert Barbour and Brother, in their report, dated Manchester, March 31, make the following remarks:—"The trade of this district, although far from active, has shown improvement during the month. A fair inquiry for China has been experienced at hardening rates, and more has been doing for general markets. For the Indian ports only a comparatively small business has been practicable, the telegraphed offers having been, as a rule, considerably under the parity of current rates. Taken as a whole, the product on both of yarn and cloth seems to be for the present fairly absorbed. This, no doubt, is in part a filling up of the gap created by the recent strike in North-East Lancashire, but the character of the demand is so cautious as to justify the expectation that the improvement may be maintained. Prices, as compared with those current a month ago are the turn doer, more especially as regards yarn.

FRIDAY EVENING.

INDIAN TEA.—The market continues quiet, without material change in value in any direction, the tendency, however, being towards harder rates for fine descriptions; while common kinds are a little cheaper. The sales have comprised 12,300 packages.

SUGAR.—At the public sales, crystallised Demerara of fine quality brought high rates for a few lots ranging up to 27s.; one lot, 27 1/2d. refining kinds are quiet. The week's business in East India has been 447 casks, 5,580 barrels and bags; 903 bags Mauritius, 370 bags Bengal, 2,980 baskets and 1,597 bags Penang, and 100 bags Porto Rico were withdrawn or bought in. Beet closes rather steadier. In the Clyde, pieces meet a good demand at firm rates. Writing from Paris, M. Bertrand Stiz says that the discouraging condition of the market reported in his last circular has continued. At Tuesday's March liquidation, notwithstanding the important quantities of merchandise taken in delivery during the past month, 25,000 bags were tendered. On Wednesday, although April had hardly begun, the circulation of futures exceeded 40,000 bags. The results of the Parliamentary inquiry, as well as the Bill which will follow, are eagerly expected, but so far nothing decisive has transpired. This uncertainty is also the cause of the discouragement of holders and of the abstention of speculators. The temperature begins now to be interesting for the new crop.

COFFEE.—East India and Plantation Ceylon, including some of last year's import, sold at rather lower rates, and the market is without activity. Of the former the catalogues comprised 123 casks 1,036 bags; medium to bold, pale greyish, 60s. to 66s.; small in proportion. Of plantation Ceylon, 3,855 casks 92 barrels and bags sold; small to low middling, 58s. to 62s.; middling, 63s. 6d. to 66s. 6d.; good to fine, 67s. 6d. to 70s.; bold, 74s. 6d. to 80s.; one lot, 87s.; 1,202 bags Manila withdrawn. Central American descriptions, part sold, previous terms, viz.:—Of 1,075 bags a third, fine ordinary, 52s. to 54s.; low middling to good, 57s. 6d. to 68s. 6d. Of 745 bags Costa Rica about half, foxey to fine ordinary, 49s. 6d. to 56s. 6d. Brazil coffee firm; 70 bags washed Santo sold, pale grey, 46s.; 740 bags washed Rio bought in at 57s. per cwt.

RICE.—Higher rates are demanded, which prevents much business being done. This week a steamer cargo of 2,000 tons Moulmein has sold at 7s. 9d., and two cargoes of Raigoon, April shipment, at 8s. $1\frac{1}{2}$ d. and 8s. 3d. open charter. Several sales reported on the spot in various descriptions, including Japan, at 9s. $10\frac{1}{2}$ d. per cwt.

SPICES no change.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, APRIL 7, 1884.

THE AGE OF ADMISSION TO THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.

LORD KIMBERLEY's decision, announced during the past week, that the present regulations in regard to the limits of age for admission to the Indian Civil Service are to be retained, is one of great importance. It deserves, and we have no doubt it will receive, full and close consideration on the part of all those who are interested in the good government of our great Eastern dependency—the more so from the fact, which we believe to be undoubted, that the decision cannot stand alone, but will involve further deliberation, and further action in one direction or the other, in order to render it generally acceptable. We understand that the question at issue has been very fully gone into both by the Government of India, and by the Secretary of State in Council. The views of Lord Ripon and the Government of India have been pretty clearly indicated, not in very precise words, but by the general tone of the correspondence (recently published as a Parliamentary Paper) upon the contention of the Government of Bombay that the tendency of the present system is to injure the physique of the selected candidates. The opinion of the Government of India is clearly in favour of the existing system, and strongly opposed to any change. But we think it is to be regretted that the full grounds of that opinion—except in so far as it is based on the general efficiency of the junior civilians in all parts of India other than Bombay—have not been made public. There is a strong feeling in a large section of the Native community that Indian youths are too heavily handicapped by the present limit of age for admission. The "crammers" in England, for very obvious reasons, are earnestly desirous of an extension of that limit. For the satisfaction of the public—English, Anglo-Indian, and Indian alike—it is much to be wished that the Government should publish, in the fullest detail possible, all the reasons by which it professes to justify Lord Kimberley's decision. The present régime is rather too fond of the sic volo sic jubeo style in the communication of its decisions to the public. We are aware that there are those, especially in the Indian Secretariats, who honestly believe that public inconvenience attends the opposite course as pursued by Lord Lytton, who actually appointed a Press Commissioner with the express object of taking the Press and the public into the confidence of the Government, and of explaining its measures and policy frankly and in detail. But, however that may be, we are confident that, as matters are now managed, the cry of the public for "more light," is entirely justified, and will have to be listened to sooner or later.

The great difficulty of the "limit of age" question lies, in our opinion, in the fact that the considerations which should influence the decision are not the same—and are sometimes in actual conflict—in the respective cases of the young Englishman and the young Indian. And to this it should be added that both are, in one important point, in conflict with the administrative requirements of the Indian Government. The papers that were published at the time when Lord Salisbury fixed the maximum age for the competition at nineteen, prove, we think, that a much higher age—not less than twenty-three, so as to include Oxford and Cambridge graduates—would be most popular both in England and in India and would be likely to produce the best men. The remarkably high average calibre of the men who are attracted into the Indian Educational Service is sufficient to show us what men we could get for the Covenanted Civil Service under these most favourable conditions. And this very high limit would, of course, equally tend to improve the selection of Indian candidates, and to give them a longer residence in England. But the local authorities were, we believe, almost unanimous in declaring that the requirements of the Government—looking especially to the comparatively short term of service possible in India, to the heavy financial burden of the pensions, &c.—rendered it impossible to assent to conditions which would allow of men commencing their service at the age of twenty-five. This consideration seems in this way to have pushed aside the solution of the question which would have been, from every other point of view, the most satisfactory one. And it unfortunately happens that, when we come to investigate other possible solutions, there is no longer the same harmony between the requirements of the English candidates and those of the Indian candidates.

To take the case of the English candidates first, as that of the more numerous body. We entirely agree with Lord Kimberley that, as far as the English candidates are concerned, there is really no tertium quid between the very high limit of twenty-three, and the low one of nineteen. The "crammers" would gain by adopting the middle limit of twenty-one. It is also just possible—though the notion is decidedly far-fetched—that Mr. Wren is correct in his contention that the English lower-middle classes, tradesmen, and others, would gain some advantage for their sons by the adoption of an age that would not fit in either with our public schools or with our Universities. But it may fairly be doubted whether these advantages would not be dearly purchased, at the cost of excluding University men and repelling the public schools. The benefits of the "seventeen to nineteen" limits may be stated almost in a word. They give the public schools a chance of competing successfully without the aid of the "crammer;" and they enable the selected candidates to enjoy, after their selection, the inestimable advantage of associating with each other, and with large numbers of other young Englishmen of the best types, at Oxford or Cambridge.

It should, however, be borne in mind, that this lower limit of age has one great and undoubted disadvantage—that it renders it very difficult indeed, and almost impossible, for Indian candidates to compete successfully in England. Lord Lytton's Government frankly recognised this disadvantage, and endeavoured to remedy it by the extremely liberal rules which were framed for the admission of young Indian gentlemen of education and position to the ranks of the Civil Service, without enforcing the voyage to England at all. But it must be admitted that the success of the scheme that gave us "statutory civilians" is very dubious, though there can be no question of the liberality of the intentions with which it was drawn up. It is possible that the remarkable increase of "Anglicism" among educated Indian gentlemen during the last few years may be the cause of the comparative unpopularity of a scheme that threw one-sixth of the Civil Service into the hands of gentlemen who have never been to England. But whatever be the cause, it seems to be admitted that the unpopularity is a hard fact, which cannot much longer be ignored. One of the immediate results now announced by Lord Kimberley ought to be a reconsideration of the whole scheme under which "statutory civilians" are appointed; and we trust that, in that reconsideration, full weight will be given to the claims that are founded on the hardship which is undoubtedly inflicted on the educated youth of India by the early limit of age rendered necessary by the other conditions of the question.

HOME NEWS.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAYS.—On April 1 the Select Committee on East Indian Railway Communications met, under the presidency of Mr. Baxter. Mr. Henry Coke, of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce, said if railways were extended, and the cost of transit reduced, he believed that Indian wheat would compete in the English market with the wheat grown in any other country. In return for the wheat, we supplied India with manufactured goods; and the trade increased proportionately. It was not his opinion that the effect of the increased export of wheat would be to diminish other exports, because in the districts that were not yet developed other sources of supply would be brought out.

CHARTERED BANK OF INDIA, AUSTRALIA, AND CHINA.—The report of the directors to be presented at the forthcoming meeting shows the net profits to be £122,727, inclusive of £6,358 brought forward. After providing for bad and doubtful debts and deducting the amount of £28,000, which was required to pay the interim dividend at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum in October, the directors propose a further distribution at the rate of 7 per cent., tax free, and recommend the transfer of £30,000 to the reserve fund, raising it to £250,000. The balance of £7,168 will then remain to be carried forward. The bank's charter will, it is stated, expire on December 29, and the directors have accepted the model charter offered them by the Government. The balance-sheet shows a note circulation of £560,658, the current accounts being £1,358,783, the fixed deposits £3,329,434, and the bills payable £4,323,313. On the other side, the cash in hand, etc., is stated at £1,224,709; bullion, £131,453; Government securities, £142,206; advances and loans, £2,766,959; and bills receivable, etc., £6,317,195.

THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.—On April 3 a deputation from the Indian Reform Association, including many native gentlemen, waited upon Lord Kimberley at the India Office, to urge the Government to raise the standard of age for candidates presenting themselves for examination with a few to enter the Indian Civil Service. Professor Thorold Rogers, M.P., in introducing the deputation, said that the requirements of the present regulations put a very severe strain upon young men between the age of seventeen and nineteen, and he could not but think that the lowering of the maximum age from twenty-one to nineteen had had a very disastrous effect upon the personnel of the service. As regards the subjects of examination, he thought that sufficient importance was not given to history. Professor Max Müller thought it would be wise to go back to the system of educating candidates in India. Lord Kimberley said that that system had broken down so completely as to be now entirely out of the question. Mr. Bryce, M.P., said that the effect of the present regulations was to limit the choice to boys, excluding University men. Pundit Shyamji Krishna Varma laid great stress on the employment of native officials. Mr. Hegger, late of the Bengal Civil Service, said that the alteration of the regulations had been made in the teeth of the opinion of the whole Indian service. After a few remarks from Mr. Wood, a former member of the Indian Civil Service, Lord Kimberley, in reply, said that the most careful inquiries had failed to show that candidates sent out under the new regulations were in any way physically inferior to those admitted under the old system. There was also an opinion among the older men in the service in favour of sending out very young men; and he referred to Lord Lawrence as one of those who held that view. The reason of the change had been a desire that young men should be under supervision during the period which elapsed between their examination and their departure for India. As to the exclusion of natives, he pointed out that within the past six years there had been twenty-eight Indian candidates. He observed that the Government had made provision that one out of every six members of the Civil Service should be chosen from the natives of India. This was as high a proportion as the Government felt justified in establishing at present. When he first came into office he communicated with the Government of India on the matter. He believed the course they would take would lead to some changes with regard to statutory civil service, but the conclusion he had come to on the whole was this—that the system having been altered only within the last seven years, and there being no absolute proof of its having broken down, he did not feel justified in making a change in the regulations. In answer to one of the deputation, Lord Kimberley said he was aware that Lord Lytton had written to Lord Cranbrook to get an Act of Parliament passed to prevent natives becoming civil servants, but if that could not be done, then the age for passing an examination should be lowered, which would practically have the same effect. The deputation then withdrew.

COUNCIL DRAFTS ON INDIA.—According to a statement posted up at the Bank of England on Tuesday the India Council during the fiscal year which came to a close on Monday night sold bills and telegraphic transfers for Rs.21,27,19,462, realising £17,315,697, and giving an average rate for the year of 1s. 7'536d. per rupee. The sterling amount received in 1883-84 on account of Rs.21,62,15,462 in bills and telegraphic transfers, including the value of Rs.41,46,000 sold in 1882-83, but not paid for within that year, was £17,599,805, while the sterling amount due on account of Rs.6,50,000 of transfers sold in 1883-84, but not paid for within the year, is £53,132. The latter sum will thus be carried to the credit of 1884-85. —The tenders for Rs.35,00,000 in bills on India and telegraphic transfers were received on Wednesday at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—In bills on Bombay, Rs.1,25,000, average rate 1s. 7'562d. In telegraphic transfers—Calcutta, Rs.10,00,000, average rate 1s. 7'656d.; Bombay, Rs.17,25,000, average rate 1s. 7'656d.; and Madras, Rs.4,00,000, average rate 1s. 7'656d., or a total of Rs.32,50,000. Tenders for bills on Bombay at 1s. 7'9-16d., and for telegraphic transfers on all Presidencies at 1s. 7'21-32d. will receive in full. Subsequently bills for Rs.61,500 were sold on Bombay at 1s. 7'19-32d.

INDIA FOUR PER CENT. DEBENTURES.—The Secretary of State for India in Council gives notice that of the £8,006,500 India Four per Cent. Debentures falling due on August 16, 1884, he is willing to renew from that date, with interest at 3½ per cent. per annum, £2,000,000 Debentures for five years, and £3,000,000 Debentures for seven years; and that the holders of India Four per Cent. Debentures will to the extent above named be allowed the option of renewing their debentures on these terms, on giving notice of their desire by letter addressed to "The Accountant General, India Office, Westminster," such letter to be delivered on or before Monday, May 5, 1884, and to state the number and amount of each debenture to be renewed, and the period of renewal desired. Applications will be acceded to in the order of priority of receipt; and after the total amount of debentures for one period has been allotted the debentures for the alternative period will be allotted to applicants for renewal irrespective of the period for which they are desired, unless a special request to the contrary is contained in the letter of application.

THE SILVER MARKETS AND THE EASTERN EXCHANGE.

TUESDAY.—The bar silver brought by the Don, and that portion of Mexican dollars brought by the same steamer which had not been sold to arrive, have now been taken off the market. The former realised 50 11-16d. per ounce, showing no change, but only 49¾d. could be obtained for the coined silver. This price is 1-16d. lower than the rate at which business had previously been done. The whole of the dollars bought to-day were destined for China and the Straits. Both the Indian rates for telegraphic transfers are firm at 1s. 7¾d., but there is no alteration in China exchange quotations. Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Rupee Paper has been steadier at 81½ 81¾, but the Four per Cents. are weaker at 78¼ 78¾.

WEDNESDAY.—The silver market has been very quiet all day, yesterday's purchases having about cleared off the whole of the recent arrivals of bars and dollars. Prices are unaltered at 50 11-16d. and 49¾d. per ounce respectively. All Eastern exchange rates are unchanged. Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Rupee Paper is firmer at 81½ 81¾, the Four per Cents. remaining at 78¼ 78¾.

THURSDAY. Bar silver is unaltered at 50 11-16d. per ounce, but the market is weak, the numbers of sellers having increased, though scarcely any business has been actually done. About £28,000 worth will be available to-morrow, and a further consignment from Brazil is very nearly due. No transactions have been entered into in Mexican dollars, and they are nominally quoted at 49¾d. per ounce. Exchange rates in the East are again unaltered. The decline in the value of money has had a favourable effect on Rupee Paper, the Four and-a-Half and Four per Cents. closing at 81½, 82, and 78¾ 78¼ respectively. The India Council have sold four lakhs of telegraphic transfers on Calcutta at 1s. 7'11-16d. per rupee.

FRIDAY.—The demand for bar silver is for the time being rather restricted, and no higher price than 50½d. was obtainable to-day. At that quotation a small business was done, but there were no transactions in Mexican dollars, which are still nominally quoted at 49½d. per ounce. To-day has been a holiday in Bombay, and the exchange advices received from other Eastern centres show no alteration whatever. Rupee Paper is quoted much as it was last night, at 81½ 82½ for the Four-and-a-Half, and 78½ 78¾ for the Four per Cent.

SATURDAY.—Bar silver, valued at about £98,000, is now available on the London market, of which almost £70,000 alone was brought by the Effective from Brazil, the remainder having been consigned by the Patagonia from Chili. No business has, however, been done, and 50½d. per ounce is a purely nominal quotation. As regard Mexican dollars, the position is somewhat different, inasmuch as there are none here. Their nominal price, with an entire absence of transactions, is 49½d. per ounce. India and China rates of exchange and Rupee Paper are alike unaltered, dealings in the silver securities having been at a standstill. The Indian Council have sold one lakh of telegraphic transfers on Bombay at 1s. 7 23-32d. per rupee, or 1-16d. higher than was paid on Wednesday.

INDIA IN PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

Mr. GIBSON asked the Under Secretary for India (1) whether the number of surgeons of the Indian Medical Service under and up to five years' service, as shown by the recently issued Bengal Army List of December, 1883, employed on "unemployed" pay in Bengal alone was twenty-eight out of a total of fifty-nine surgeons; (2) whether it was a fact that all these twenty-eight surgeons employed on "unemployed" pay were not only supernumerary to the actual number of appointments, but were even also supernumerary to those surgeons who were only "officiating" for officers who really held these actual appointments, but were at present on leave; (3) whether it was a fact that, considering only the cases of all surgeons under and up to five years' service, as shown by the Bengal Army List of December, 1883, 54 surgeons out of a total number of 59 joined would have to retire from the list in question before any candidates who competed for the appointments offered for competition in February could obtain any of the rates of pay now termed "substantive;" (4) what were the nature and value of the five appointments advertised for competition for February, 1884, and what were the nature and value of the five appointments that had been advertised for competition in August, 1884; (5) whether there was in the whole Indian Staff Corps one instance of an "unemployed lieutenant" drawing the pay of 256 rupees per mensem, as alleged by him; and (6) whether it was a fact that when being "instructed" or doing duty, the officers of the Indian Medical Service actually received less pay than their brethren of the same standing in the Army Medical Department.

Mr. CROSS: I will answer the right hon. gentleman's six questions as follows:—(1) Yes; of fifty-three, not fifty-nine surgeons of five years' service and under, shown in the latest Bengal Army List, twenty-eight are on unemployed pay. (2) Yes; these twenty-eight gentlemen, who form a portion of the reserve needed for the medical service, are in excess of the officiating and substantive appointments. The ordinary reserve to meet furloughs and casualties is twenty per cent. on the number of appointments, but the actual number of furlough absentees this year falls considerably short of that proportion. (3) I am not sure that I understand this question, though I have spent two hours over it. It is obvious that substantive appointments must be vacated before new men can fill them, but the retirements will be at the top, and not at the bottom of the list. The average number of casualties for the last ten years in the Indian Medical Service has been thirty-one. Assuming this average to be continued, it will be the number of substantive appointments annually vacated. (4) This question is asked under an evident misapprehension of the nature of the appointments to the Indian Medical Service. The Secretary of State advertised that an examination of candidates for five appointments in Her Majesty's Indian Medical Service would be held in February, 1884. These are simply appointments to the Indian Medical Service, and five candidates were selected from twenty-one who presented themselves, the whole twenty-one being duly qualified. (5) No, sir; so far as I know, there is not one, nor have I ever made any allegation to that effect. There is no need for a reserve for the Indian Staff Corps, but if there were any unemployed lieutenants, they would receive 256 rupees per mensem. (6) Yes; while merely doing duty with British or native troops, officers of the Indian Medical Service draw less pay than officers of the Army Medical Department of the same standing in India, but for the remainder of their service their prospects are much better and their average salaries much higher. (Hear, hear.)

The Budget was issued in the form of a minute by the Finance Minister, Sir A. Colvin, on the 14th ult. The surplus for the current year will, it is estimated, amount to £319,000.

The Budget has, on the whole, been favourably received, but general regret is expressed that the settlement of the Licence Tax question has again been postponed.

The Viceroy and Lady Ripon have completed their visit to Puttiala and are proceeding direct to Simla for the season.

FINAL FRENCH STRUGGLES IN INDIA AND THE INDIAN SEAS. Including an account of the Capture of the Isles of France and Bourbon. Colonel G. B. MALLESON, C.S.I. London: By W. H. Allen and Co. 1878

"How India escaped from the government of Prefects and Sub-Prefects to fall under that of Commissioners and Deputy-Commissioners; why the Penal Code of Lord Macaulay reigns supreme instead of a Code Napoleon, why we are not looking on helplessly from Mahé, Karika, and Pondicherry, while the French are ruling all over Madras and spending millions of francs in attempting to cultivate the slopes of the Nilgieries, may be learnt from this modest volume. Colonel Malleison is always painstaking and generally accurate: his style is transparent, and he never loses sight of the purpose with which he commenced to write."—Saturday Review

SOME ACCOUNT OF THE ADMINISTRATION OF INDIAN DISTRICTS
DURING THE REVOLT OF THE BENGAL ARMY.

By

HENRY GEORGE KEENE, C.I.E., M.R.A.S.,

Author of "The Fall of the Mughal Empire," &c.

"The author breaks new ground. He essays to inform us how the different districts in the North West were per-served from anarchy by their civil administrators during such a stupendous catastrophe as the revolt of the army, upon which we support social order, in a great measure, rested. The task involves stories of adventure and pluck, which come amiss to the many readers who have relatives serving abroad; and these stories are given in picturesque language, with a conciseness precluding tedium, and in a tone throughout of the modesty which seems natural where duty is considered the first obligation, and courage the first attribute, of an English gentleman."—World."Mr. Keene tells how the civil officers in the districts kept or restored order, largely by their own individual influence, often by heroic exertion, and almost invariably with the loyal aid of native subordinates. He describes events which occurred in some eight or nine districts of the North West Provinces and Bengal. His narrative is interesting in style, but it clearly shows that courage, firmness, heroism, and self-sacrifice were displayed among the members of the Indian Civil Service, as well as by the soldiers who stormed Delhi, relieved Lucknow, and avenged the crime of Cawnpore."—Scotsman."This work claims our hearty recognition of its thoroughness. It gives us a most readable and trustworthy account of the reports of eye-witnesses, always the most valuable to the student of history. It has a special interest from the fact that Mr. Keene was himself one of those district officers who honourably held their ground during these exciting times."—Literary World."Mr. Keene writes to give somewhat tardy honour where it is due—viz., to the civilian officers who, during the period of the Indian Mutiny, remained at their posts, and in many instances deprived of military aid, had themselves to raise and command levies for the protection of the district."—Morning Post."A volume which seems to us to break new ground, and to supply a want felt by those who have ever endeavoured to study the subject. The matter is, for the most part, new, and it treats of incidents in themselves fully
are all related in picturesque language."—Home News.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION
OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give with a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally be practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 20 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ON DUTY UNDER A TROPICAL SUN.

FOR
The maintenance of Health and Bodily comfort and the Treatment of Simple Diseases; with Remarks on Clothing and Equipment for the Guidance of Travellers in Tropical Countries.

BY MAJOR S. LEIGH HUNT, Madras Army,

AND
ALEXANDER S. KENNY, M.R.C.S.E., A.K.C.
Senior Demonstrator of Anatomy at King's College, London; Author of "The Tissues and their Structure."

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"By attending to the instructions which are given in this eminently practical work, the traveller or sojourner in tropical countries will learn how he may not only tolerate but enjoy life in them."—Broad Arrow.

"This is a small book, but a very useful one, being full of valuable hints as to how Europeans may best preserve their health in hot countries. Of particular value are the chapters on diet, dress, and equipment, matters of the first consequence to the preservation of physical health."—Globe.

"The author's suggestions and remarks are based on the most practical experience. The book contains a good deal in a small space, and should be invaluable to all who have to go to the tropics."—Saturday Review.

"The value of the work is enhanced by the fact that the writers have limited themselves solely to suggestions which have arisen in their personal experience, and every intending visitor to a tropical climate would do well to take the book (which is small and concise) in his kit."—Morning Post.

"The soldier, the traveller, the sportsman, are told not only how to ward off the most common diseases and inconveniences, but how to deal with the former in the absence of a medical man."—Vanity Fair.

"This is a small work, but it contains in less than 140 pages an amount of valuable information and experience that might well have filled a volume twice its size."—Overland Mail.

"The facts the authors are anxious to convey are laid down clearly and concisely, and in as few words as possible. It may be said to represent a sort of little medical mouse, capable of making a hole in the network of tropical disease sufficiently large to allow many victims to escape."—Homeward Mail.

"It should be invaluable to young men going abroad, and of great use even to those who have some experience."—Allen's Indian Mail.

"Gentlemen whose duties may lead them to take up residence, either temporarily or permanently, in the East, will find a great deal that is useful in this volume."—Sportsman.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C.
BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff)
DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORO-DYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE IN-VENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr.
Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.
This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY THE INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.
See The Times, July 15th, 1864.

DIARRHOEA, DYSENTERY.
GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH,
LONDON. REPORT that it ACTS as a
CHARM, one dose generally sufficient.
Dr. GIBSON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHOEA."
JAMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Stoke, Jan. 5, 1880.

TO J. T. DAVENPORT, London.
DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East, as a remedy of general utility. We much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhoea and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Nausea, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhoea, and even in the more terrible form of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

SPECIFIC
CHOLERA.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE is the TRUE
PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER,
NEURALGIC RHEUMATISM.
DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,
PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.
IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRU-PULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists.

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS. W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

PERSONAL REMINISCENCES OF GENERAL SKOBELEFF.

BY

V. I. WEMIROVITCH-DAUTCHENKO.

TRANSLATED FROM THE RUSSIAN

BY

E. A. BRAYLEY HODGETTS.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

St. James's Gazette.—"The new Biography of Skobelev is . . . deeply interesting, and the translator has done well to make it known to the English public."

Contemporary Review.—"It is most interesting, as well as . . . instructive throughout."

Graphic.—"The subject is of abounding interest. . . Mr. Brayley Hodgetts deserves hearty thanks for bringing such a life so clearly before the public."

Academy.—"The account of the third battle of Plevna. . . is one of the most stirring pieces of military journalism that we have ever read."

Public Opinion.—"Such will suffice to give us an idea of the 'Reminiscences' of the man who knew no fear, who passed as by a miracle through every danger, and who, had he lived, might have become the greatest soldier of our age. . . The work is, in every respect, thoroughly well got up. . . Too much praise cannot be given to Mr. E. A. Brayley Hodgetts for the able manner in which he has translated the work into English, and who has succeeded in making it so interesting and readable."

Whitehall Review.—"The Author's peculiarly happy anecdotal style of narration accords perfectly with the eventful career of Skobelev, his brilliant exploits, and his versatile genius."

Spectator.—"The writer correctly estimates his work as . . . 'merely a collection of fragmentary reminiscences.' . . From these fragments, however, it is easy to see that Skobelev was a real hero of the knight-errant, a fairy-prince kind."

Liverpool Mercury.—"A very remarkably entertaining book has been issued by Messrs. W. H. Allen of Waterloo-place, called 'Personal Reminiscences of General Skobelev.' . . The author is a romancer."

Scotsman.—"The admiration verging on idolatry with which Russians regard the memory of General Skobelev is forcibly illustrated in this volume. . . Very skilfully translated by E. A. Brayley Hodgetts."

A RIDE TO KHIVA

BY CAPTAIN FRED BURNABY,
Royal Horse Guards.

Says page 13:—"Two pairs of boots lined with fur were also taken; and for physic—with which it is as well to be supplied when travelling in out-of-the-way places—some quinine and Cockle's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the natives of Central Africa with the greatest possible success. In fact, the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheik, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him five COCKLE'S PILLS will never fade from my memory; and a friend of mine, who passed through the same district many months afterwards, informed me that my fame as a 'medicine man' had not died out, but that the marvellous cure was even then a theme of conversation in the bazaar."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, APRIL 15, 1884.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, March 27; Madras and Allahabad, March 26; Calcutta, March 25.

We trust it may now at length be said that the wounds caused by the wretched Ilbert Bill controversy—wounds that threatened to cut deep into the best life of India—are in a fair way of being healed. The Hindoo Patriot, the leading organ of Native public opinion, has the following kindly paragraph on Mr. Roper Lethbridge's candidature at Whitby:—

"We heartily welcome the intelligence that Mr. Roper Lethbridge stands a good chance of being elected M.P. for Whitby. In the heat of the Ilbert Bill controversy some of our best friends were ranged against us, and Mr. Roper Lethbridge was one of them, but as far as we know he is a sincere friend of this country, and now that that unhappy controversy is over, he will, we make no doubt, prove the same zealous champion of India that he was before. If he gets into Parliament we feel convinced that he will raise his voice on behalf of the dumb millions of this country. We, therefore, wish his candidature every success."

The excitement produced in India by the Russian Annexation of Merv is distinctly on the increase. Here at home John Bull has "gone to fat," as Bismarck pleasantly observes of us under the Gladstonian regime. But in India, both to Englishmen and to Indians, things still appear as they really exist, and not as seen through the hazy medium of two columns of Gladstonian verbosity; and the result is, that the Times correspondent telegraphs from Calcutta:—"The Russian occupation of Merv is said to be the common topic of discussion in all the bazaars of Afghanistan and Upper India."

The most important political event in India during the past week has been the publication of the Maharajah of Darbhanga's Minute of Dissent, from the report of the Select Committee on the Bengal Tenancy Bill. We deal with this subject in our leading columns.

The lack of rain in Northern India is already becoming serious. Science and experience alike teach us that the dread visitation of famine comes upon us in India as inexorably as the maxima and minima of the sun spots. But every true friend of India, in praying to be delivered from this scourge, will especially pray that it may not come whilst we have such a paralytic administration as the present.

DR. BANKS and Captain Fergusson have been distinguishing themselves by breaking the law in Bombay; and Sir James Fergusson seems to have made a mistake in treating the former too severely, and the latter (his own nephew) too leniently. The matter is one to be regretted from every point of view.

We have to thank Messrs. Thacker and Co., of 87, Newgate-street, for a copy of "Indian Lyrics," by Mr. W. Trego Webb, of the Bengal Education Service. A casual glance through the pages of this dainty little volume reveals beauties of diction and (we believe it may justly be said) true poetical inspiration of so high an order that we feel Mr. Webb's "Lyrics" cannot be dismissed in an off-hand notice. We propose to attempt a careful examination of these poems of Indian life in an early issue.

Once more has the march of events signally avenged Lord Beaconsfield of his cruel traducers. A telegram from Nicosia, dated Friday last, gives the actual figures of the revenue and expenditure of Cyprus—the sanitarium of our Egyptian forces and Mr. Gladstone's "pestilential hole." The telegram runs as follows:—"It is officially announced that the revenue of Cyprus for the year ending March 31 last was £80,000 in excess of the actual expenditure." May we not hope that this telegram, taken in connection with all the other events of the past four years in Egypt, in Ireland, and in every other part of the world, will induce some at least of Mr. Gladstone's colleagues to don the primrose next Saturday?

THE Times correspondent telegraphs from Calcutta that the Native press has at length formulated the concessions it demands from Lord Ripon; and among these concessions, eight in number, the fifth is, "A Permanent Settlement for all India." That the case for this demand is a strong one is quite sufficiently proved by our "Deccan Ryots' Relief Acts," and our "Jhansi Ryots' Relief Act," forced upon us by the sheer desperation of the peasantry in those parts of India where there is no Permanent Settlement.

It is, however, rather amusing to observe that, while these demands are being formally urged in India, the Raja Rampal Singh and the other disciples of Mr. Seymour Keay (or is it Mr. Foggo?) in England are meeting to "support Lord Ripon" in his attacks on the Permanent Settlement of Bengal.

Two meetings of these enterprising young gentlemen were advertised for last week. We have not been able to discover in the London press any further reports of those meetings than the advertisements convening them. If any of our readers meet with any reports, we should be glad to be referred to them.

In the London correspondence of a provincial Radical journal, a correspondent has discovered the following interesting reference to one of these meetings:—

"Professor Max Müller is more satisfied with the Ilbert Bill than one would have thought. The learned philologist should have been present at the Indian meeting last Friday, but he was unable. He wrote, however, that he was 'particularly anxious' to congratulate the meeting and 'all true friends of India, to whatever party they may belong, on the great triumph' they have obtained. He added:—'Every great triumph is mixed up with some small disappointments, but these can be corrected by-and-by. The essential point is that the fundamental principle on which the proclamation of the Empress of India rests has been maintained against all quibblings, that the honour of England is saved, and the Imperial word has been kept sacred. Do not trust to party, but trust to the great heart of England, or if that sounds too poetical, trust to the good sense of the English people.'"

As Lord Ripon's policy in India has got to be regarded as generally an anti-English one, Professor Max Müller is naturally found among its supporters. That the Professor's long residence among us has opened his eyes to our many national failings, we have had many opportunities of learning. Whether it be to sneer at the Orientalism of the University which has employed him, or to gird at the niggardliness of a Government from which he has received lavish subventions, Professor Müller is ever ready to prove that gratitude is properly subordinated, with him, to the stern duties of the high-minded censor. He might, however, perhaps have spared us the delicate sarcasm of contrasting the "great heart of England" with the "good sense of the English people."

A QUADRUPLE marriage has just been celebrated at Ranaghat which has been the scene of great rejoicings in consequence. The four younger brothers of Baboo Surendro Nath Pa Chowdhry, the well-known zemindar, were the happy bridegrooms. Almost every leading native gentleman of Bengal was invited. Among those who came from Calcutta were the Hon. Kristodas Pal, the Hon. Kumar Boycunta Nath Day, Raja Harendra Krishna, Raja Rajendra Mullick, Nawab Abdool Luteef, Baboos Shama Churn Law, Charoo Chunder Mullick, and Kumar Ramendra Krishna, and others. The festivities consisted of nautches, jatras, &c., and alms, food, and clothes were liberally distributed to the poor, something like Rs.60,000 having been spent altogether.

THE Indian Statesman, popularly supposed to be Lord Ripon's own organ in Calcutta, thus speaks of Mr. Grant Duff at Madras :—

"He is simply eaten up with a sense of his own importance, and of the elevation on which as Governor he stands above all others. His reign happily will soon be over, when India will be relieved of the presence of the very smallest of all the local Governors who have been imposed upon her in the last half-century."

THE Madras correspondent of the Pioneer is even more severe on this very superior person. Nor is the local press much more kind. The Madras Mail denounces in strong language the apathy and unconcern manifested by the Government and the Municipality in the presence of the epidemic of small-pox which is ravaging the city. In the week ending March 7, the deaths numbered 370, which is stated to be the highest total on record in the city. "This," says the Mail, "is shocking. And more, it is most discreditable to the Government and condemnatory of the Municipality. The Governor remains in his hermitage at Guindy, and makes no sign; and the Municipality seems to be acting on the assumption that the pestilence will die out of its own accord." The same paper suggests the necessity of convening a meeting of the inhabitants, with as little delay as possible, for the purpose of considering the sanitary condition of the town and devising measures for its improvement.

THE Pioneer devotes an article to the consideration of that part of the Financial Statement which deals with the question of railway extension in India. It says that for many months past—in fact, since January of last year—the Government of India has been sending home schemes recommending loans, begging, entreating, and almost menacing, and all in vain. It adds :—

"We shall be violating no official confidence if we state, by way of example, the nature of one of the controversies over which all these precious months have been wasted. The Government of India, it is well known, recommended amongst other schemes, in the beginning of 1883, the construction of about 3,800 miles of railway, which it declared to be indispensable for protective or other purposes. Amongst these lines was one from Bhopal to Jhansi and thence to Gwalior (for Agra) and Cawnpore. Another was the much discussed project which is to bring Calcutta into immediate connection with the cornfields of the Central Provinces, and thus, when the entire project is completed, with the southern and western parts of the Empire. Will it be believed that it occurred to the Secretary of State, or to the able Secretary who performs his functions in matters of railway controversy, to resist the suggested undertakings on the ground that the projected lines were not likely to be of use in time of famine, and could not be regarded as 'protective' in the sense in which that word was used by the Famine Commissioners, when they urged the construction of another 10,000 miles as essential to secure immunity from the effects of famine."

WE are glad to observe, in the Times of India, that it is stated that the proceedings of Syed Abdul Hak Sirdar Diler Jung Bahadur, C.I.E., who has lately returned from England after negotiating the Hyderabad-Chanda Railway scheme, have, after being subjected to the most careful scrutiny, been ratified and fully confirmed, as the present Government is confident that the scheme will prove beneficial to the State. The agent of the railway company has started three survey parties, and work has been commenced. The Government of India have entrusted the company with the survey of the connecting line from the frontier to the Nizam's territories to Bezpada in British territory. In recognition of the special services rendered by Sirdar Diler Jung in successfully carrying out this important and intricate project, His Highness has been graciously pleased on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, the Nawab Salar Jung, to raise him to the dignity of Doulah and a Theen Hazari Mansab, with the usual honours and following of troops attendant on the title which has been conferred on him. The Sirdar Diler Jung will, in future, be known as Sirdar Diler-ud-Doulah Bahadur.

THE Statesman, however, rages as furiously as ever over the whole course of Haiderabad politics. This is the amiable reception our contemporary affords to the above paragraph :—

"We have been prepared for this intelligence from the time we heard of Abdul Huq's arrival at Hyderabad. For this worthy brought with him from London a large sum of promotion money, and he has made a good use of it. It will be remembered that when the Statesman began to expose the state of matters at Hyderabad in the presence of the accused parties themselves here in Calcutta, it was affirmed that it had been 'bribed' to make these charges. At the very time this calumny was being propagated, the Government was itself seeking proof of Abdul Huq's corruption in the business, and was offering, through Mr. J. Lambert, of the detective police force, a large sum of money for certain papers that have come into the Statesman's hands. These papers show not merely this man's corruption, but that of every one connected with the scheme at its inception in October, 1881. Mr. Lambert offered on behalf of the Government of India a large sum of money for the 'papers' now in possession of this office. It is a matter of distress to us, we confess, that there seems to be almost no hope of rescuing the young Nizam from the ruin in which the corruption by which he is surrounded, threatens to overwhelm him. Instead of being bribed to make these disclosures, it is the statement of a fact that this journal has had to pay heavily for the means of unravelling the story. The information was not sought by us; it came to us unsolicited, and as the Government was attempting to buy it, we had to outbid it. We might, we think, have expected from our contemporaries another course than that which they have seen fit to follow. It is not for us, however, to dictate to them what they should do. We shall lay the whole story before the world as clearly as we can, and shall have then done all that is in our power to do, to save the young Prince.

AND again, elsewhere :—

"Is Lord Ripon, we ask again, blind that he cannot see what all this means? The very same civilian officials who have been steadily refusing 'concessions' of any kind to the great railway companies of the country—although they have offered terms of the utmost advantage to the public to be allowed to extend their lines—conspire to force this line upon the Nizam's ministry, and throw every consideration of economy and of common honesty to the winds, that they may carry their point. It is cause of astonishment to us that our contemporaries do not join us in the demand that Lord Ripon should arrest the scheme instantly. What possible answer is there to this disclosure—that while refusing to give a guarantee or concession of any kind to the railway companies in British India—we force the Nizam's ministers by positive threatenings to give a guarantee and concessions of the most onerous order, to a scheme got up by Indian officials for the sake of the enormous amount of promotion money, and the heap of highly-paid sinecure appointments connected therewith? Instead of the terms in which we have spoken of the scheme being temperate, they are not half severe enough to characterise it aright. We refuse to make the very slightest 'concessions' ourselves, while we compel the young Nizam to submit to a scheme of wholesale plunder, by which a lot of retired civilian officials are to be provided with salaries in England from the Hyderabad treasury. All India is watching the progress of this quarrel, while many of our contemporaries—slow to recognise the true character of the scheme—are unfortunately lending their influence to propagate the belief that it is a wise and honest arrangement, and that the Government should insist upon the young Nizam sanctioning what a part of his council gave their quasi assent to, under Residential threatenings. That the scheme will never be carried through is certain, and it will wreck Lord Ripon's reputation hopelessly if he does not dissociate his Government from it absolutely, now that its true nature has been disclosed to the world. We are in no anxiety about it, for we know that we have made its execution impossible."

THE Hindoo Patriot, discussing the Budget, says :—

"We still adhere to our opinion own that the Government has made a wanton sacrifice of revenue by remitting the import duties, and reducing the salt duties. The Government, we fear, feels the loss in every department, and we should not be surprised if it should in the course of the next five years be driven to the necessity of imposing fresh taxation to meet additional calls for expenditure. Already the pinch has come upon the Education Department, and whispers are heard about the imposition of an educational cess. Would this necessity have arisen if Bengal had been allowed to keep its own salt revenue?"

THE Hindoo Patriot says :—

"Mr. C. E. Buckland's dream has been realised. The Howrah Town Hall, which was his pet project, and which, without his heroic efforts, we fear, would never have been a reality, has been built and inaugurated. On Saturday last the ceremony of opening it was performed by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor with great grace and good taste, in the midst of a large and influential gathering. The arrangements made by Mr. Grimley, the Magistrate of Howrah, were excellent. It is noteworthy that one native gentleman, Babu Kadernath Cundu Chowdry, has given Rs. 10,000 for the construction of the Hall."

The Hindoo Patriot says:—

"The Land Law mania seems to have extended to Mysore. A correspondent has sent us a report of a meeting of Inamdars held at Bangalore on Jan. 27 last. Its object was to protest against the new Land Revenue Code, which will come into force on the 1st prox. The Inamdars are holders of lands granted to them free of rent by the previous Maharajas of Mysore, and the new Code proposes to interfere with their rights. The meeting resolved upon a remonstrance against the Bill."

The Englishman gives the following account of the Calcutta Freight Market for the week ending March 25:—

"We have had no alteration in the existing state of affairs. Produce of all descriptions is as scarce as before. The only improvement has been in steamer rates, which, owing to a temporary scarcity of ready tonnage, have slightly stiffened. Sailing vessels are still neglected, only four having found employment during the past week. Owing to a number of arrivals, our unfixed tonnage has considerably increased, amounting now to nearly 50,000 tons; which at the present rate of demand will take us about six months to work off."

We take the following on the Calcutta Indigo Market from Messrs. W. Moran and Co's Market report:—

"Since our last issue there have been a few light falls of rain over some parts of Behar, which have done more harm than good, causing the plant to burn. So far as our advices go, Chuprah has the least favourable prospects, the plant being poor and thin in many places, and not in a condition to stand a long drought. In Tirhoot and Chumparun, considering the short rain fall of last season, and consequent want of moisture, the plant has come up as well as could be expected, but good rain within the next few weeks is necessary to enable them to make a fair season. From Lower Bengal generally the reports are very gloomy. Jessore has had a fall of rain sufficiently heavy to sow upon, but none of the other Zillahs have had any, and the want of it is being severely felt. The October plant is everywhere stunted and backward, and no progress can be made with the spring sowings."

The same firm gives the following on the Calcutta Tea Market:—

"Business in this article is now nearly suspended. The auctions held on the 20th ult., comprised a total of 3,727 packages, almost all of which found buyers. There was no alteration to notice in prices, and the bulk of the tea offered consisted of common and a few medium lots. Any further auction there may be will be of no importance, and virtually the season is closed. Up to date from May 1, 1883, the export is about fifty-seven and a half million pounds. Business in this article is reported to be more brisk in the Melbourne market, and some demand has lately shown itself for American requirements. Reports from the growing districts are generally satisfactory, though the season will not be so early as was once expected. In Assam there has been good rain. Chittagong has also been favoured in this respect, and the Terai and Darjeeling districts have had some showers, though partially distributed, and more moisture is required. Some parts of Cachar have suffered from hail storms, but to no material extent."

The Times of India gives the following obituary for the week ending March 28:—

"Dr. Harvey, Professor of Botany and Materia Medica, Madras Medical College; Major C. Covey, Durham Regiment."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

The following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated April 13:—

"The Maharajah of Durbungah's minute of dissent from the report of the Select Committee on the Bengal Tenancy Bill was published yesterday. The Maharajah bases his dissent on the broad ground that the Bill will not settle the land law on a firmer, juster, or more satisfactory footing than it now stands on; that it will neither keep the cultivation of the soil in the hands of the substantial peasantry who are able to withstand the vicissitudes of the season, nor tend to promote the accumulation of wealth, the sound growth of credit, and the progress of agricultural improvements; and that it involves great and entirely novel departures from ancient custom and existing law. He finds it difficult to understand the principles on which the Government proposes to change the present law."

He describes the object of the Bill as being 'to deprive one class of vested rights without compensation, and to give those rights to another class.' He says that the Bill has created an amount of ill-feeling and distrust never before excited in India by any project of legislation. He denies that the zemindars are rapacious and unscrupulous; and asks what they have done to deserve the treatment which the Bill would accord them. He then takes up the Bill chapter by chapter, and discusses it at great length, finding fault with almost every detail of it; and concludes by urging that, if any measure be now necessary, it should be conceived in such a spirit and be so framed that, instead of creating future difficulties, it should set the subject at rest for ever—a course which he thinks cannot be effectively adopted unless the Select Committee be empowered to take evidence and be supplied with proper information.

"That the Maharajah of Durbungah's opinion would be decidedly adverse to the Bill was, of course, a foregone conclusion. Although he cannot be described as an impartial witness, still the views of one of the largest landholders in Bengal, and the representative of the entire body of zemindars, must necessarily carry great weight; and the most ardent supporters of the Bill will find it no easy task to meet many of the Maharajah's arguments and objections."

"The long-continued drought and the great heat of the weather are beginning seriously to affect the prospects of the crops in the planting districts. With the exception of two or three light and local showers, there has been no rain in Bengal and Behar since Christmas. In Behar the fierce hot winds are rapidly burning up the indigo crop. A worse district is Chupra, where the indigo will turn out very badly should the present weather continue for a week longer. Things are not quite so bad in the tea and jute districts; but in these, too, rain is much wanted. At Simla, the water supply has fallen so short that work on the new Government offices has been suspended, and 5,000 workmen have been sent to their homes. From all parts of the Bengal Presidency there is a cry for rain."

"The Governor of Bombay has again succeeded in attracting to himself the attention of all India. The facts of the case are briefly these:—Dr. Banks, Civil Surgeon of Ahmedabad, went out for a day's shooting last January. While stopping for lunch at a place called Sanand, he directed his servant to take his rifle and drive the deer towards Sanand, telling him at the same time to shoot a buck if he had a chance. The servant returned without the rifle and with the marks of a severe beating on his person. His story was that, having killed a buck near a village, he had been assaulted by the villagers, who had taken away the rifle. Dr. Banks went to the village, searched some of the houses, and found the rifle concealed in the roof of one of them. He then ordered his servant to give the villagers a thrashing, and made them pay the man twenty rupees as compensation."

"The matter having come to the ear of Sir James Fergusson, he has made it the subject of a long and verbose Government resolution. The magistrate of the district and the commissioner of the division are severely censured for not treating it as one of more importance, while Dr. Banks is dismissed from his appointment. That Dr. Banks did wrong in taking the law into his own hands is undeniable; but the view of all the European and of the more moderate native journals is that the punishment is out of all proportion to the offence, and that Sir James Fergusson has given one more instance of the capacity for making mountains out of molehills which seems to be so marked a feature of his character. Nor is his position improved by a disclosure made by the Times of India to the effect that recently a case of assault on the police by the Governor's nephew and aide-de-camp had been hushed up. There is some dispute as to the facts in the last-mentioned case, but it seems to be clear that Captain Fergusson did assault or obstruct the police in the execution of their duty, and that the matter was allowed to pass on his apologising to the superintendent."

"In the course of the discussions on some recent measures of the present Government, allusion was often made to the appetite for concessions which such measures were likely to arouse among the natives. One newspaper has now formulated its demands, and the writer advises his countrymen persistently to agitate till they obtain them. The concessions required are, first, the election of representative assemblies with a vote on the expenditure; secondly, the gradual extinction of the Covenanted Civil Service; thirdly, the admission of natives to commissions in the native army; fourthly, the abolition of the Public Works Department—all public works to be done by contract; fifthly, a permanent settlement for all India; sixthly, the revenue of each province to be expended in that province; seventhly, the substitution of native Vakeels for English Residents in the native States; and, eighthly, the abolition of the Indian Council."

"I mentioned some months ago that the site of the historical Black Hole of Calcutta had been discovered and excavated. It may be interesting to add that the excavation has now been filled up, and decently paved over; and that a handsome tablet of white marble, bearing a suitable inscription, is about to be placed near the spot."

"The Russian occupation of Merv is said to be the common topic of discussion in all the bazaars of Afghanistan and Upper India.

"The Indian Government appears to be at last awakening to the grave importance of the latest Russian advance, and to be quietly pushing on a railway towards Quetta. It is reported, too, that a large contract has been given for the storage of grain and fodder at certain posts in the Bolan, and that orders have been issued to repair the buildings at Sibi and Perchoki in order to render them fit for the occupation of troops.

"A less trustworthy rumour is to the effect that negotiations are proceeding with the Ameer for the friendly occupation of Candahar by British troops, and that the Ameer is willing to consent, for a consideration.

"The Anglo-Indian newspapers are all but unanimous in declaring the Central Asian question to be one calling for immediate attention, and in urging that no time should be lost in appointing a Commission to demarcate the northern and western boundaries of Afghanistan. Some go on to advocate the sending of Engineer officers to fortify Herat. Various other measures are also recommended; and there can be no doubt that the incorporation of Merv in the dominions of the Czar has caused very serious anxiety throughout India.

"It is reported that half the city of Mandalay has been burnt down. No particulars of the disaster have yet been received; but it is stated that the fire broke out on the morning of the 2nd inst., and that 1,500 houses were burnt in the course of two hours. The origin of the fire is unknown, but it is supposed to have been accidental.

"Cholera and small-pox are still raging in Mandalay, and another of the King's daughters has died of the latter disease.

"Three State prisoners—namely, Sirdar Abdul Rasul Khan, Surteep Noor Mahomed, and his son—having died suddenly one night in prison at Cabul, it is suspected that they were made away with.

"Another engagement has taken place between the Ameer's troops and the Mongols, resulting in much bloodshed and ultimately in the retirement of the former.

"The Ameer is treating for the purchase of a steam plough which was recently exhibited in Calcutta.

"An extensive lead mine has been discovered at Ghorband, near Cabul."

BURMA AND TONQUIN.*

THE contents of this little book are of a varied and useful character, and recent as well as present events in Annam—especially in its Northern province, Tonquin—will tend to make it interesting to the general reader. Above all, it is remarkable for, perhaps, the shortest and most concise account of Burma which has yet appeared, and the leading points of information on this, our most prosperous Eastern possession—unfortunately so little known to English readers—are given with much care and research. In times like the present, when there is no saying what France may accomplish in the far East, such an account is particularly handy and useful. It would also form a suitable introduction to the study of the "foremost country" for the use of schools, or where the name of Burma is almost entirely unknown.

Some amusement may be gained from the dialogue concerning "How the Frenchman sought to win an Empire in the East;" but even this is interlarded with some interesting historical remarks. The probable effects of French success in Tonquin on British interests in Burma are pointed out with force and clearness; and it must strike the attentive reader that the sooner a British Resident is appointed at Mandalay, the better. General Millot having taken Bac-Ninh, mighty, by some chance of war, one day find himself not very far from Upper Burma; when, should King Theebaw ask him for assistance against rebellious slaves, some very pretty political complications might arise in Eastern Asia; and then China—whose vassal Burma is—might feel inclined to come more to the front than ever. The "Addenda" of this work, among other interesting and useful subjects, contain a sketch of the French in India, thirty-six years ago; forming a valuable historical and statistical record. The frontispiece of the great Burmese bell at Rangoon, is exceedingly well drawn. The original—although the author states to the contrary—we believe to be still on the upper terrace of the Great Pagoda (and strange enough, Colonel Lawne does not mention the fact) was ordered to be cast by King Tharawadi, to celebrate his visit to Rangoon, at the close of 1841. On the whole, we consider this little book worthy of extensive patronage.

TACTICAL TRAINING OF SOLDIERS.*

OUR army is at present suffering from a fever of imitation of the Germans—because they were successful in their last war—just as for years previous we imitated the French in everything. Comparatively small consideration seems to be given to follow and utilise the peculiarities of our own army. The Germans taking their men by conscription can train them very severely during two or three years, for the men are always not far from home, and the country can be much more utilised for military operations than England, where any attempt at deploying troops in fields is met by threats of action for trespass and immediately compensated for with heavy damages. At Aldershot, the Curragh, and in India there is some chance for training troops in the open, but at most of our military stations it is very much a case of asking officers to make bricks without straw. As our soldiers are constantly being drafted abroad, there is hardly any chance of the continuity of instruction that German officers can manage. Still, the British officer will undoubtedly do his best and Lieutenant Craufurd's work will be found very useful. It gives headings and "ideas" for tactical lectures to the men, and for the practical instruction to follow it up. The tactical theories may be generally relied on as safe and correct, and the remarks on fire discipline are especially good. He advises, among other things, that men should always be carefully trained to keep back two or three rounds, only to be used in great emergency—a most valuable principle—but goes on to recommend the trouser pocket for this purpose. Experience will show if this is the best place, but as a rule the trouser pocket is the handiest place to get ammunition from, and men in action are apt to make use of it for rapid loading and firing. Mr. Craufurd is a Guardsman, and in the question of outpost duty he coolly writes of employing an old soldier or two to take temporary charge or mark points. There are some old soldiers to be found in the Guards, but an officer training recruits with an Infantry Depot is generally the only person that could be described as an old soldier, and yet before he has got his men into any training they may, under the present system, be sent out to fight men who have fought in earnest since they were children.

ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE.*

IN the number for April there is a curious and somewhat instructive article by Capt. M'Taggart, on the "Capacity and Effect of Infantry Fire." The writer shows the absurdity of arming our troops or any troops with an intricate and exact machine as a rifle constituted to make accurate practice at 2,000 yards, and furnished with a wind gauge, unless you can first of all invent some new kind of man without nerves and who does not get out of breath. The arguments based on target practice do not apply to war, and there would be very different results in the Wimbledon competitions if the target could shoot back. We are reminded of a discussion we once heard, when an enthusiastic young Hythe instructor was holding forth on the utter destruction that must inevitably ensue to any troops facing a company of riflemen who could make bullseyes at 600 yards. An old captain present, who had seen a great deal of war, suddenly growled out, "Young man! Do you know what soldiers fire at in action? They fire at the moon, and they don't often hit that, or anything else!"

An article on "Tinkering and Tailoring," by a Colour-Sergeant, will be found very valuable, for he goes into the points that are not easily apparent to the commissioned officer and shows what injury to the army has followed reckless reform in what may be called small matters, yet leading to increased insubordination in the ranks and to substantial grievances to the soldier in the matter of clothing. Articles on the "Feather Bonnet" and on "Colin Mackenzie" will be found not only of great interest to Highland officers, but of historical value. The great battles of Vienna in 1683, when the Turk was driven back, and thenceforth ceased to become a terror to Christendom, form the staple of the article by Colonel Malleon. Mr. Hooper's account of "Pepps as an Official" is as interesting as before. The importance of "Military Ballooning" is well brought out by Mr. T. Hanson Lewis, and the magazine closes with some striking chapters in the novel of "Man Proposes," by Mrs. Phillips.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HOW DRUNKENNESS IS PROMOTED IN INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

DEAR SIR,—Last December I was granted an opportunity of explaining to several representatives of the various temperance organisations in England the evils of the "out still" system in India. On that occasion I pointed out that the policy pursued by Government in relation to the liquor traffic in India was very different to that of the barbarians who, centuries ago, from time to time invaded India and ruled its people with despotic power. Whatever race the conquerors belonged to, they all discouraged the manufacture of intoxicating beverages. The East India Company repeatedly urged upon its officers in India that they should do all in their power to check the vice of drunkenness among the native population, though their action might result in a loss of revenue. These are views not entertained by those who control the affairs of our Indian Empire nowadays.

The Government seem entirely regardless of the degradation into which the native population are falling, so long as the revenues of the State are increased. Twenty years ago it was a rare sight to see a drunken native, but now it is common to see natives of both sexes intoxicated.

Ten years ago the rules relating to the manufacture of spirits were very strict. A limit was fixed by the Government as to the quantity that was to be made. The distilleries were periodically inspected by the magistrate, and a police force was maintained at the distillery to see that more than the proper quantity was not manufactured. All this has been changed. Restrictions have been abolished. The right to manufacture liquor is disposed of by public auction, and open violation of the Excise regulations are permitted to pass unnoticed.

Numerous petitions have been sent in from all classes of society, Europeans as well as natives. Millowners, representing capital to the extent of £3,300,000, have appealed in vain for reform. Tea planters, who have to pay their employees in sickness or health, complain most bitterly that since the multiplication of distilleries and the manufacture of liquor without restrictions, it is no unusual thing for them to have large numbers of their hands sick or rather stupefied through drinking the fearful poison the "stills" are allowed to manufacture. I use the word poison advisedly, for the beverage sold from the "stills" contains more fusel oil than alcohol.

The appeals made in India to the Government have been ignored, but I trust this statement of facts will induce those Englishmen in this country who have no desire to see the natives of India civilised off the face of the earth through drunkenness, to take the matter up and afford practical sympathy.

The Good Templars belonging to the Middlesex District Lodge have memorialised the Secretary of State for India on the subject, and in so doing have set an example I hope every other temperance and total abstinence organisation in the United Kingdom will follow.

The letter herewith attached is from Mr. Evans, a Baptist missionary of thirty years' residence in India, and as it bears out my statements, I shall deem it a great favour if you can find room in your valuable columns for its publication. I remain, yours obediently,
F. T. ATKINS,
142, Buckingham Palace-road, April 10, 1884.

"Mission House, Monghyr, March 4, 1884.

"MY DEAR MR. ATKINS,—It will rejoice the hearts of many people in India, both Europeans and natives, to hear that the out still system question is to be taken up in England, and that a memorial is to be presented to the Secretary of State for India on the question.

"I have fought hard against this hydra-headed monster from the beginning, and I succeeded in getting the out stills in the district of Monghyr reduced from 493 to 203. Fancy the change. In Monghyr town, under the old system, we had but one Sudder distillery—and in the whole district only 13—and now, under the out still, we have in the town 8 out stills, and in the district 185. The Government saw that great evil was done, and they have reduced the out stills in the whole of Bengal from 6,284 to 4,419. But this is no real remedy, and I will tell you why; though the number of out stills are less, yet the drinking and distillation is more, for the rent paid for license to sell is more year by year. The existing out stills turn out more drink month by month—as they have no limit, and nothing to pay for spirits distilled. They simply pay monthly rent, ranging in Monghyr from 300 to 1,000 rupees per month per shop.

"There is an Excise rule that the stills should not contain over 10 gallons, but the stills range from 30 to 60 gallons, and no notice is taken of it. According to the rules the quantity to be extracted is (the same as under the old system) 22 gallons of London proof spirits out of one maund (80lb.) of Mowah from which the liquor is made. But now the out stills force out as much 20 and 30 gallons, which, of course, is not alcoholic spirits at all, but fusel oil forced from the refuse of the Mowah fruit, which is most noxious and very injurious to those who drink it. This stuff is sold at the extraordinarily low price of half an anna, or about three-farthings per quart-bottle, and one bottle is sufficient to produce ordinary intoxication, though it has been proved by the hydrometer that its alcoholic strength is 91.2 below proof. Still it intoxicates, and that is why the people drink it freely; they drink simply to get drunk, and they can now get the luxury for three-farthings, so that, while before, when the native liquor used to be 1s. and 2s. per bottle, it was beyond the reach of the common people, now, being so cheap, all drink—the very beggars can now afford to get drunk, and women and children take fast to the evil habit, so that the flood is advancing day by day and, unless the Government speedily put a stop to it, India will be deluged with drunkenness.

"To give you some idea of the increase in this demoralising trade, take two facts:—

"1st. The revenue from the native Excise in Bengal has increased by 50 lakhs of rupees in five years, since the introduction of the out still system. Fancy £500,000 more spent now than used to be spent by the natives of Bengal for strong drink!

"Yea—and that is only a part—the part paid to Government. We may well add £500,000 more for expenses and profit to the out stillers—so we have now a million of money more spent, chiefly by the poor of Bengal, than used to be squandered for strong drink. Take another fact. I cannot say what is the proportion of spirits distilled and consumed now in various parts of Bengal compared with the old system; but I know the comparison in Monghyr, and I think we may take that as a fair sample of the whole country.

"In Monghyr town, under the old system, the average quantity of native spirits distilled daily, as given me by the officer in charge of the Excise here, was forty-one gallons. But now, under the out still, what think you is the daily average out-turn of native spirits here? Well, it is 1,120 gallons!

"This statement I gave the Excise Commission in evidence the other day, and it is a fact which no one can deny.

"True, the spirits under the old system were stronger in alcoholic power, but not much stronger in intoxicating power. The Excise revenue in Monghyr some twenty years ago was about £10,000; ten years ago it was £20,000; now it is £40,000; while the revenue from native Excise for Bengal has gone up in some five years from £60,000 to over a million sterling! The amount of property, of demoralisation, of misery, and destitution which this has been the means of, no one but God knows, and depend upon it that the day of fearful retribution will come to a so-called Christian Government, which derives revenue from the vices of the people, and which places before the poor all manner of facilities and temptation to drink for filthy lucre sake.

"The evidence before the Excise Commission, which is now going about making inquiries, is overwhelming as to the universal spread of drunkenness since the introduction of the cursed out still system introduced by Sir Ashley Eden.

"I must tell you that this same system was in vogue before, about twenty years ago, but it was then so hemmed in by salutary restrictions, that it neither proved very lucrative to the revenue, nor very injurious to the people, so that the Board of Revenue gave it up, and established the Sudder, or Government Distilleries, but finding that they did not yield as much as they should, the Board again resumed the out stills, and this time gave them I may say unlimited liberty, so that this time it has proved a grand financial success, but at a terrible and, I fear, unremediable sacrifice to the people of India, who, if once victims to the curse of drunkenness, will not have the necessary moral strength to burst the bonds of the terrible evil, the cravings of which are stronger than death.

"We have now a favourable opportunity to stamp out the out stills, for, with Lord Ripon as Viceroy, and Mr. Rivers Thompson as Lieut.-Governor of Bengal, we hope that the result of the inquiry made by the present Excise Commission, which is to send in its report in April, will be the abolition of the out stills at least in all the larger cities and towns in Bengal. Yet you in England should not relax your efforts, for we know that though the evil is so great, yet, as it is bound together by a golden chain of £500,000, it will take many a hard blow to snap it asunder. It is no easy matter even for good rulers to give up so much money with the coffers of the State in such low condition. I would, therefore, say to all the temperance organisations at home, 'unite, muster, organise a strong force as soon as possible, to set before the Government in England proofs of the terrible evils of the present system of native Excise in Bengal, and give not peace to the land, nor to the officers of State, until this black blot on our Christian Government in India be blotted out.'

"I send you by book post a number of papers, which will supply you with information on the question, and if you succeed in your attempt to get the out stills swept out of Bengal, your visit to England will prove a far greater boon to India than the compromise of the celebrated Ilbert Bill. The Ilbert Bill touched the rights of Europeans in matters of laws, but the out still system eats into the very core of the millions of the land and if not soon put a stop to will reduce the masses of the people into a nation of senseless sots.

"Let me know if there is any further help I can give in this matter. You have my best and devoutest wishes for your success in the good work, and may the blessing of the Most High rest upon every effort to extinguish the curse of drunkenness is the prayer of Yours very faithfully,

"THOMAS EVANS."

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Permit me to recall your attention to the necessity of having a continuous railway from Allahabad to the Krishna river, North of Raichore. Our army in India is too small to enable the Bengal army to dispense with the assistance of Madras troops.

From Allahabad to Jubbulpore there is an excellent railroad, the property of Government: the engineers, by taking the line westward through Manikpore and Markoondie, avoided the necessity of taking the railway up the steep gradients of the Sohagi Pass. From Jubbulpore southward, we have, during twenty-seven years, neglected to prolong the road to Nagpoor; and we have thus played our enemies game, by preventing the possibility of Madras troops being moved rapidly to the assistance of the Bengal Army. This infatuation is the more astonishing, when we consider how we have forced the Hyderabad Government to undertake a railway connecting Hyderabad with Hingunghat and Nagpoor. The merchants of Calcutta and Bombay have been bothering the Government to make a grand railroad from East to West through Nagpoor, but they appear to be ignorant of the necessity of making a branch northward from Nagpoor to Jubbulpore.

Some worthy Englishmen, unacquainted with military matters, may urge that there already exists a railway from Nagpoor westward, to Bhosawul, 244 miles, and another from Bhosawul eastward, to Jubbulpore, 340 miles: but in a time of war, this angular line of 584 miles may be broken in a hundred places. The bridge over the Taptee River north of Bhosawul, 2,625 feet in length, may succumb to the influence of dynamite; Boorhanpoor and Asseergurh must be held by us in strength.

The expenditure of one million sterling, in constructing 134 miles of railway, will secure our hold of India, and enable troops from Masulipatam, Bezpada, Raichore, and Secunderabad to be hurried to the assistance of the British in the plain of the Ganges. From Ambgaon on the great Calcutta-Nagpoor Railroad, a railway can be constructed northward through the valley of the Weingunga River to Pindrei, and from the latter place to the great railway bridge over the Nerbudda River, twenty miles west of Jubbulpore. If the Right Honourable W. E. Baxter, President of the Committee of the House of Commons on Indian Railways, would take the trouble of questioning any military officer who has travelled through India, he would learn that the construction of a railway connecting Jubbulpore with Nagpoor may save us hereafter the expenditure of a hundred millions sterling, and the loss of thousands of valuable lives.—Your obedient servant,

April 11.

P.S.—"Our object is to direct attention to Wellington's dying legacy, and to our greatest living warrior's equally solemn enunciation:—

"Woe to the nation that forgets the military art! Woe to that nation—woe to that nation which keeps up riches, but which does not take the precaution to defend them."

THE TAXATION OF SILVER PLATE.

THE following plea for the abolition of the silver duty is from a working man engaged in the trade:—

How long will the Government continue to halt between two opinions—that the claim for the abolition of the silver duty is a just one, and should be attended to, but that it is inexpedient to do so by paying the not very large sum demanded as drawback by the trade? The Chancellor of the Exchequer says he will not relieve the rich folk who purchase solid silver plate at the expense of the whole taxpaying community; a very good reason, perhaps, if that were the only outcome of the question. But what has he to say about the large body of artists and artisans who have, at the expense of long study and binding apprenticeships, qualified themselves for following the silversmith's calling, and who are now without work, and without work mainly because of a fiscal arrangement which produces small revenue to the country at large, but sadly short commons for the workers in taxed silver? Not long since the Premier, in answering an address presented to him along with a gift of Crown Derby china, dilated somewhat fully on the pottery trade, its history and present position among the industries of England, claiming that this country has been the first in which this elegant art had reached to the highest excellence without State aid. An assertion so comprehensive as this from so competent an authority naturally sets one to inquiring, What are the conditions under which the makers of the various kinds of pottery—and the varieties are almost innumerable—carry on their manufacture, so as to have attained for themselves the high position claimed by Mr. Gladstone, not only in the home trade, but also in the open markets of the whole world? Are arrangements in force by which they are protected from competition, and rival manufacturers kept at a safe distance? By no means; they have to work against free imports from every spot on the surface of the globe where they can spin a potter's wheel or paint an earthenware pipkin. And those countries in the East, the mention of whose silver work seems to send a cold shiver through the trade, are welcome to send their most enticing fictile wares for sale in open market amongst us. India, Persia, China, Japan—all contribute freely to our choice of fancy pottery, but they do not even menace, far less destroy, the demand for our own home productions.

Take the history of the very factory in which the present of the Derby working men to Mr. Gladstone was made. Crown Derby china like Chippendale and Sheraton furniture, or Queen Anne plate, had for a long time been looked upon as an auction-room curiosity. The old factory at Derby had dwindled to a very small establishment, its chief business being the matching of old services of china in the possession of families throughout the country. The growth of a taste for various wares in imitation of those produced last century was taken advantage of about seven years ago by persons well conversant with the requirements of the trade, who had abundant capital to work it, and who succeeded in purchasing a right to imprint the well-known trade mark. They have gradually and steadily worked their way into the front rank, each year's productions being in advance of its predecessor in the quality and decoration of their work. Two years ago the company engaged as their art director a gentleman who is well known both at South Kensington and Goldsmiths' Hall. Mr. Richard Lunn, originally a silver engraver in Sheffield, and a zealous student of art, both in its history and practice, whose knowledge is as minute as it is extensive, takes entire charge of the decorative department at the Derby China Works, with results which prove the good judgment exercised in the selection of one so competent. The productions of the company are in great demand in America. Vases and other ornamental articles of the most gorgeous and costly character are exported to that market in increasing numbers, and the builders are in oft-repeated request to enlarge premises which already accommodate between three and four hundred workpeople. Mr. Lunn and one of his most practical assistants have both been drawn away from the silver trade, in which they found small return for the time they had spent in the effort to make themselves useful in it.

Minton's, Doulton's, Copeland's, and many others throughout the country, are continually advancing in novelty and excellence of production. As Sir T. Farrer told the House of Commons' Committee on the Plate Duties and Hall-marking, "You do not know what you may hinder by maintaining obsolete and worthless restrictions on a trade." Experiments, risky and costly, are continually being made by the potters, new materials are brought in, and new combinations of the old one are continually being tried. But would the manufacturers undertake them with the fear of a Goldsmiths' Hall before their eyes? Not likely indeed! Instead of old trades springing into renewed life, we should find old and highly reputable factories shutting up or passing into other hands, the whole capital having been dissipated by the wasting effects of an ever decreasing demand. Let the upholders of things as they are tell us how the trade must go down before they will be able to see the need for a change. They have had their way for long enough to test its effects. Suppose we try a change now. It is not easy to imagine one for the worse. All sound reason, all experience, in this country points to freedom from ill-judged restrictions as the first condition needed for the successful development of a manufacture. Restricted silver and unrestricted pottery are at the opposite ends in the scale of prosperity, one being an honour and a profit to the country, and the other something very different. The Goldsmiths' have abandoned their former practice of giving liberal prizes for mere paper plate, and now restrict their benefactions to art-workmanship. If they would supplement their good action in that by assisting to abolish a tax, the proceeds of which would then be largely diverted into the pockets of the men whose skill they are doing so much to foster and encourage, they would be more consistent, and would awaken the gratitude of those who find that at present the art most likely to find patronage in the silver trade is that which will cover the greatest amount of space at the smallest amount of cost.

As for the workmen themselves, one wonders whether they know they are the only body who are at present free from unlimited foreign competition. Their conduct in London last year is difficult to understand, first favouring, then condemning, the move for abolishing the duty. Those who led them on in their final move may be clear-sighted enough in their warerooms and counting-houses, but they are not good guides where the principles that lead to a nation's prosperity are in question. Let us hope the workmen will look deeper into the question this year. The facts alluded to in this paper, and they are related with a full knowledge of the subject, are well worth pondering over. They are the deliberate convictions of one who, more than forty years ago, was the only convert to the doctrines of free trade in a whole shopful of workmen, and who has been an ever-willing witness of the great changes for the better England has experienced since those doctrines began to be acted upon. The silver trade has been left as an almost solitary exception to the application of those principles, and the results are self evident to many.—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE PUNJAB REST HOUSE, WOKING.

THE Times has the following very encouraging account of Dr. Leitner's project:—We are able to announce that Dr. Leitner, the Principal of the Lahore Government College, has completed the purchase of the Royal Dramatic College at Maybury, for the purposes of an Oriental University, Museum, and free Guest House for natives of the East belonging to the better classes. It will be remembered that the foundation-stone of the Royal Dramatic College was laid by the late Prince Consort in 1860, and that it was inaugurated by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales in 1865. It was to afford a dignified retirement to members of the dramatic profession, and liberal contributions poured in from every quarter. A large sum of money was spent or wasted on the erection of a remarkable building, constructed under the supervision of the late Sir William Tite, and the groves of the Academy were imitated in the walks of the grounds that surround the college. Its hall was profusely adorned with busts, rare paintings, and even jewellery; but fortune was not conciliated, and after a period of dissensions among the actors, all went to the hammer. Sir Theodore Martin observes, in the "Life of Prince Consort," that the Royal Dramatic College is "one of the few institutions in which he interested himself that have not succeeded." It will be a satisfaction to the public to learn that it is now to be devoted to a purpose which may prove to be of the greatest advantage to the Eastern relations of this country. The first impulse to the present scheme appears to have been given by Sir Henry Maine, who in 1868 laid before the Indian authorities a scheme drafted at his suggestion by Dr. Leitner for an Indian institute in or near London. The idea was warmly taken up by a Punjab association of European and native officials and gentlemen, which has since continued to urge it as the best means of training natives of India for the various professions, and for enabling native officials in the educational, judicial, engineering, and other departments of our Indian administration to avail themselves of the facilities offered for improvement in their respective specialities by this great metropolis in the event of their spending their periods of leave in Europe, as some of them already do. It has, however, been noticed that the natives who have returned from this country to India have not that influence among their respectable fellow citizens which their sojourn in the midst of our civilisation would have warranted us in assuming. The fact is that they have lost caste, and have in consequence become too alienated from the community to be trusted as advocates of progress. Many of these Anglicised natives fall into evil courses, and few have fulfilled the expectations of their education. To prevent the necessity of loss of caste, which now deters our best Indian fellow-subjects from visiting the seat of the Empire, from learning the lessons of our civilisation, if not faith, and, in short, from availing themselves of its culture. Dr. Leitner is making somewhat technical arrangements both here and with one of the steamship companies, which will have the effect of preserving caste for those to whom it is an object to return to India with unimpaired influence among their fellow countrymen. One wing of the Royal Dramatic College will be devoted to Hindoos and Sikhs, and the other to Mahomedans. Free quarters will be given, and each resident will be enabled, if so disposed, to cook his own food in accordance with national or caste usage. The expense of living will accordingly be small, while facilities for instruction will be afforded by various public institutions which are within easy reach of Waterloo Station, where the student arrives from Maybury in thirty-seven minutes by the fast train, thus rivalling the rapidity of conveyance from a London suburb. As regards the Oriental University, we are informed in the programme that it will conduct the Oriental examinations of the Punjab University in Europe, just as some of the examinations of the University of London are conducted in several of the colonies, and that it is intended to form a link between European and Eastern Orientalists in the production of original and translated works, and in the prosecution of research. The object of this branch of an Indian corporation is evidently to encourage both students and authors of Oriental literature in Europe by giving them not only honours, but also profitable occupation.

The Oriental Museum, and the Library, which will explain its lessons, are mainly for the promotion of Punjab commerce and industrial art, and will endeavour to bring the English purchaser into direct relations with the Punjab manufacturer; but they will also illustrate the literature, art, archaeology, and ethnology of the East in the widest sense of the term. Various collections have already been promised to the museum, and it is more than probable that it will also contain the art treasures collected by Dr. Leitner himself, which we described ten years ago as invaluable, and which are still deposited on loan at the South Kensington and other Museums.

As endowments come in it is proposed to found Oriental professorships, fellowships, and scholarships, and to enable Europeans and others who prepare themselves for official, professional, and even mercantile careers in the East to study Oriental languages free of cost, as is already the case in France at the Paris School of Living Oriental Languages. We trust that Dr. Leitner's scheme will receive every encouragement both from the learned public and the Government of this and every other country that takes an interest in the East.

THE EAST BENGAL LANDHOLDERS' ASSOCIATION.—IMPORTANT MEETING.

THE Fifth Anniversary Meeting of the East Bengal Landholders' Association was held at the residence of Nawab Ahsanollah Khan Bahadur on Tuesday, March 4, 1884, at 7.30 a.m. Present:—Nawab Ahsanollah Khan Bahadur, Babu Babu Ram Chander Banerjee, Babu Roma Kanta Nandy, Babu Jadu Nath Bysack, Babu Radhico Mohan Bysack, Babu Gobind Lal Bysack, Babu Rup Lal Das, Babu Brojendra Kumar Roy, Babu Kali Prosuno Ghosh (Representative of Kuma Rajendra Narain Roy of Bhowal), Babu Gobind Chander Das, Babu Kailash Chander Sen, Babu Gobind Chander Bysack, Babu Kali Kumar Banerjee, Babu Purna Chander Banerjee, Babu Sasi Bhushan Rai, Babu Sasi Bhushan Dutta.

Proposed by Babu Roma Kanta Nandy and seconded by Babu Kailash Chander Sen,

That Nawab Ahsanollah Khan Bahadur be elected President, Rajah Shama Sunker Roy, Rajah Surja Kant Acharjee Choudry and Kumar Rajendra Roy, Vice-Presidents; and Babu Purna Chander Banerjee Sree Nath Roy and Gobind Chunder Das be elected Honorary Secretaries, for the present year. Also that the members of the Executive Committee of the past year be elected to form the Executive Committee of the present year.

After the business of the day was over, a subscription list was opened to raise money for the fund inaugurated by the Central Committee of Landholders to take measures to oppose the Bengal Tenancy Bill. Eight thousand Rupees were subscribed on the spot, Nawab Ahsanollah heading the list with Rs. 5,000, with a promise to double the amount, if necessary. It was then resolved to circulate the list among the zemindars who were unavoidably absent.

With a vote of thanks to the chair, the meeting separated.

MR. McIVER AND THE SALEM RIOTS.

(FROM THE CORRESPONDENT OF THE "BOMBAY GAZETTE.")

MADRAS, MARCH 15.

TO-DAY the Athenaeum publishes further correspondence about the Salem riots, together with Mr. McIver's letters, about which there has been considerable excitement here recently. The minutes by the principal members of the Government, which are now published, were evidently confidential, and how the Athenaeum, of which Mr. John Wallace is the editor, obtained copies is a mystery. The judgment of Mr. Wigram, Sessions Judge, was circulated for the information of the members of the Government. Mr. Carmichael remarked that he would like the Government counsel to be asked if an appeal against the acquittal on the charge of abetment of murder could not be made when these gentlemen (the prisoners) stir up a thousand of the lower orders to attack the Mosque with sticks and swords, and incite them generally against the Mahomedans of the town. He thought the point quite arguable. The Hon. Mr. Sullivan added that he thought so too. The Governor said no doubt the point was quite arguable. Afterwards the Governor says the reason given in Mr. McIver's letters and the letter of the Government pleader were sufficient, and he approves of the appeal. In the letter by the Hon. Mr. Sullivan, he says of Mr. McIver's letter already published, that "barring the sneer at local authority, this is a good letter of Mr. McIver's. Shephard ought certainly to have opposed suspension of sentence, and it would be well to ask for the court's proceedings containing the reasons for acquiescence to the prayer of the convicts. I don't attach much importance to the fancied irritation of the judge on being lectured by Mr. Wigram. They will give him a knock in return et voila tout. As to their playing to the gallery, it is twaddle into which Mr. McIver with much ability is inclined to drift. His suggestions at paragraph four are eminently practical, and I recommend that they may be given effect to."

To this the Governor adds, 'I agree.' So that instead of censuring Mr. McIver for his remarks about the High Court, the Government actually adopted his suggestion. The opinion in Madras is that these exposures are far from creditable to the Government.

The Athenian publishes the following minutes by members of the Madras Government on Mr. Wigram's judgment in the recent Salem riots:—

I should like our Counsel to be asked D. O. if an appeal against the acquittal on abetment of murder could not be made when those gentlemen stir up 1,000 of the lower orders to attack the Mosque who train with sticks and swords, and incite them generally against the Mohamedans of the town. I should think the point quite arguable.—D. F. C., 27-10.

I think so too.—H. E. S.

No doubt the point is quite arguable, but if the High Court, upholds Mr. Wigram's decision, quite enough will have then been done for order, while a check, such as we should have if the High Court agreed with Wigram, would be inconvenient, and so far as it went a gain to the friends of disorder.—M. G. D., Oct. 31, 1882.

Circulated again.

I thought so, but the reasons given in Mr. McIver's letter which is dated 4th of November, and Mr. Shephard's of 6th are sufficient, and I now approve of the appeal.—Mr. G. D., November 9, 1882.

Mr. Shephard's letter to Mr. G. S. Forbes of 6th November, 1882, and Mr. McIver's letter circulated.

I should have answered your letter of the 28th October before, but I wished first to read over Wigram's judgment. The point is very arguable, and I think there ought to be an appeal, for if the rioters intended beforehand the destruction of the Mosque, they must have intended as a necessary consequence of their acts the putting to death of any Mahomedans who might be in the way. At the same time, I doubt whether with the evidence adduced any Court would actually convict the prisoners of abetment of the murders that have been proved. I may as well take this opportunity of suggesting that there should be an appeal against the acquittal of Muthusawmy, the Sub-Overseer, and Kondia Chetti. The evidence against them is, I believe, exactly the same in character though less in quantity than that against some of those who were convicted, and the reasons for acquitting do not appear to me satisfactory. The appeals, if they are to be made, ought to be presented without delay. In the case that begins on Wednesday I hope there will be more distinct evidence to connect certain deaths that happened with the general plans of the rioters.—Believe me, yours truly, H. H. Shephard.

I think the appeal should be preferred in both instances, and Shephard should be instructed to take action at once.—H. E. S., 8-11.

Yes, I inclined the other way at first, but the reasons set forth in the papers have convinced me.—M. G. D., Nov. 9, 1882.

Barring the sneer at local authority, this is a good letter of Mr. McIver's. Shephard ought certainly to have opposed the suspension of sentence, and it would be well to ask for the Court's proceedings containing their reasons for acceding to the prayer of the convicts. I don't attach much importance to the fancied irritation of the judges on being lectured by Wigram. They will give him a knock in return, a et voila tout. As to their playing to the gallery, it is twaddle into which Mr. McIver with much ability is inclined to drift. His suggestions at paragraph four are eminently practical, and I recommend that they may be given effect to.—H. G. S., 8-11.

I agree.—M. G. D. Nov. 10, 1882.

THE CALCUTTA UNIVERSITY.

A REMARKABLE meeting of the Senate of the Calcutta University has recently taken place. The most important question for discussion was the utilisation of the Premchand Roychand scholarship. It was proposed by the Faculty of Arts that the scholarship should not be a reward for past work but for future exertions, that the competition should be alternately each year in literature and science, and that the science student should be compelled to proceed to England and prosecute his studies there for five years. These recommendations, it was well known, had been suggested by Mr. A. M. Bose. At the Senate meeting they were unanimously rejected. Mr. Bose's amendment was not seconded, and he did not wait to vote against the substantive motion. Under a singular coincidence of circumstances, Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, himself an England-returned native, and Dr. Rajendralala Mitra, a champion of Hindu orthodoxy, went hand in hand in opposing Mr. Bose's proposals. Mr. Bonnerjee proposed that the studentship be a reward for past work, that the alternative of literature and science be maintained, and that the condition of going to England in the case of the scientific student be dispensed with. Mr. Bonnerjee boldly declared that it would never do to apply the Hindu donor's money "to make Hindus un-Hindus and Mahomedans un-Mahomedans." The generous sympathy which Mr. Bonnerjee thus evinced for his orthodox countrymen was highly honourable to him. Dr. Mitra, in his sledge-hammer style, made a smash and hash of Mr. Bose's proposals. Mr. Bose, however, warmed up against one count of Dr. Mitra's indictment—viz., that the recommendation of the Faculty of Arts would hold out a premium to apostasy. He replied by saying, firstly that sons of orthodox Hindu gentlemen now proceeded to England for education, and secondly that the Faculty had not had the religious question in view when it made the recommendation, and that if the people had regarded it in that light, they would certainly have held public meetings to protest against it. Mr. Bose is quite right in saying that sons of orthodox Hindu gentlemen are now going to England for education, but he forgot, as a speaker reminded him at the meeting, that they did not go under any compulsory or coercive system. Then Mr. Bose might not have had any religious feeling in the matter, but the outside public could not mistake the direct effect of the Faculty's resolution upon the Hindu religion. Take for instance the opinions of some of the heads of the affiliated colleges. The Principal of the Ravenshaw College, Cuttack, writes:

"It is without doubt desirable that the candidates holding the greatest prize the University bestows should have a careful training in Europe at the hands of those who are masters of their subjects. But it is doubtful whether the mass of the orthodox community in this province would not object to their young people taking a trip to England even as holders of a liberal scholarship founded by a Hindu gentleman. The resolutions in question, while remedying imperfections in the old rules for the award of the scholarship, have at the same time effected a compromise between the extreme sections of the native gentry."

The Principal of the Dacca College says:—"Lastly, there is the proposal to oblige the science students to proceed to England. This is a condition that will weigh so heavily, that it will still further detract from whatever advantages may be gained by the system of alternate examinations, and will have the effect of lessening largely the number of those who will elect to go up in science. In short, the studentships in science must fall, as a rule, to second-rate men; or, being withheld for want of first-rate men, will fall into disfavour altogether."

Babu Nilkant Mozumdar, himself a distinguished Premchand Roychand scholar, whom the Principal of the Dacca College quotes, says:—"The arguments employed in favour of the proposal to send the Science students to England are, as far as I have been able to see, mainly two in number. The first argument is, that the Hindus of the present generation have no objection to proceeding to England, for the sake of study. This assertion is based upon a misapprehension of facts. Brahmos and a few influential families of Calcutta, have no objection of going to England. But Pandit Mahesh Chandra Nayaratna says very truly, that the feeling of the orthodox community is very strong on this point."

The Principal of the Burdwan Raj College writes:—"A journey to Europe, however desirable it may be from an educational point of view, is in the case of a Hindu, attended with social difficulties of such magnitude as to all but outweigh important considerations in its favour."

These extracts are enough to show whether the Faculty's recommendation has not been regarded by educational officers as a premium to apostasy, as contended by Dr. Mitra. As for there being no public meetings by way of protest, surely Mr. Bose ought to know that we have not yet become, as the same native speaker to whom we have referred above told him, a shrieking nation. Silent suffering is our distinguishing badge. Dr. Mahendralala Sircar also opposed Mr. Bose's proposals. While Mr. Bose would compel his countrymen to go to England to study science, it was quite refreshing to see distinguished representatives of Western culture advocate perfect toleration in the matter. Mr. Elliot, Rev. Mr. Robertson, and Mr. Reynolds, the Vice-Chancellor, with a liberality of feeling, which did them great honour, declared that they could not support a policy of coercion in the matter of education, that if the Hindu community were not prepared to sacrifice their religious and social feelings for the sake of a scientific studentship, it was not for them to force it upon them, and that in determining a question of this kind they should be guided by the opinion of those, who were most affected by it. So Mr. Bonnerjee's motion was carried nem. con. We congratulate the Senate on the wise and just decision they have arrived at.—Hindoo Patriot.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

Sir,—Mr. Slagg's advocacy in favour of a Standing Parliamentary Committee authorised to call for Indian papers and raise a debate on questions of Indian policy would have been intelligible if no means had already existed for obtaining similar information; but any member of Parliament may call for papers, and those on India have never, I believe, been refused, excepting on such special grounds as could be successfully maintained also against the proposed committee. The evil would seem to lie in the very absence of any deep interest, on the part of Parliament, in questions of Indian administration, when these cannot be made to serve party purposes. For instance, the Bengal Tenancy Bill, a land law of a most comprehensive and revolutionary character, dealing with the rights of property, abolishing the freedom of contract, and generally affecting the interests of fifty millions of our fellow subjects in the most flourishing of our Indian provinces, was introduced in the Legislative Council of India upwards of thirteen months ago. The public mind in Bengal has been violently disturbed by the proposed legislation, landed property has been seriously depreciated, public meetings have been held all over the country protesting against the measure, and memorials to the same effect have been presented to the Viceroy, the Secretary of State, and to both Houses of Parliament. Yet no member appears to have felt sufficient interest in the subject even to call for the papers connected with the measure. Meanwhile, the most contradictory views are expressed regarding its scope and tendency, the supporters of the Bill stating that it is calculated to improve the position of the cultivators, while its opponents maintain that it would reduce the cultivators to a condition little removed from that of serfs.

The Bill, in accordance with official routine, was submitted for the opinion of the Chief Justice of Bengal and of the District Judges and Commissioners, who would have to administer the measure if it were passed into law, and these officers have condemned it as calculated:—

1. To create a new class of middlemen vested with the power of rack-renting their tenants the cultivators, and to deprive the cultivators of the soil from the protection they now receive from the law.

2. To set class against class, to incite to litigation and to devices for eluding the law, and in the end greatly to injure the condition of both the landowners and the cultivators.

3. To involve a breach of public faith by violating the pledge solemnly given to the landowners of Bengal by the Government of India with the concurrence of the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain.

The reports of the above-mentioned officers, and some correspondence between the Viceroy and the Secretary of State on the subject of the Bill, have been published in India, and would doubtless not be withheld from Parliament if they were called for. The minutes of the Indian Council might be attained at the same time, and enable Mr. Slagg to see how far his sweeping condemnation of that body is warranted. At all events, looking at the extraordinary conflict of opinions regarding the very scope and tendency of the Bill, it is earnestly to be hoped that one who feels the interest which Mr. Slagg has evinced in the good government of India will not neglect the opportunity of obtaining the information which is so greatly needed for enabling Parliament to form a correct judgment on a measure of such vast and vital importance. Any Parliamentary action which might then be taken would serve to show how far Mr. Slagg's proposal to place the administration of India under the immediate control of the British Parliament is likely to be beneficial to the people of that country.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

THE MAHARAJAH OF DARBHANGA ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

If we may judge of the Maharajah of Darbhanga's "Minute of dissent," published on Saturday, from the summary of it in yesterday's Times telegram from Calcutta, it seems likely to be a document of high historical importance, as one of the ablest and most authoritative indictments of Lord Ripon's revolutionary policy that has yet appeared. As the Times correspondent points out, the Maharajah speaks with all the weight of one of the largest landholders in Bengal. An accomplished nobleman of rare courage and public spirit, he has fearlessly done his duty as a member of the Viceroy's Legislative Council; and has clearly warned Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert of the ruin which their reckless folly is bringing on the fairest province of India. The Maharajah is unquestionably backed up by the cordial sympathy and unanimous support, not only of the whole landed interest of Bengal to a man, but also of all others in that province, whether Indian or European, who have anything to lose in the general scramble which Lord Ripon seems anxious to precipitate. We have already commented on the establishment of the "Indian Constitutional Association"—founded "to resist the introduction into India of dangerous measures altogether unsuited to the country"—as one of the most important political events of the century, and as the necessary and only valuable outcome of Lord Ripon's crazy Radicalism. The Association numbers on its Council every name of eminence, outside official circles, in Bengal. Its presidents and vice-presidents are H.H. the Maharajah of Darbhanga, H.H. the Maharajah of Hutwa, H.H. the Maharajah of Dumraon, the Prince Mahomed Furrokh Shah, the Maharajah Sir Jotendro Mohun Tagore, K.C.S.I., Mr. J. J. Keswick, and the Hon. A. B. Miller; and the members of Council are likewise, without exception, men of mark, whose opinions could not safely be disregarded by any Government. Such is the character of the support in Bengal which backs the "dissents" of the Maharajah of Darbhanga and the Hon. Kristodas Pal. Our readers are already familiar with the constitution of the London Committee which, under the leadership of men like Mr. C. T. Buckland, Sir Henry Ricketts, and Sir George Yule, is earnestly co-operating in this country with the supporters of British honour and of the rights of property in India. It remains to be seen whether, in spite of all this testimony, and in the wantonness of his despotic power, Lord Ripon will persist in violating every human and divine sanction, in his reckless desire to please a faction at home and to earn notoriety for his incendiary legislation.

The Maharajah of Darbhanga declares that the Bill "has created an amount of ill-feeling and distrust, never before excited by any project of legislation." To English readers, mindful of Lord Ripon's exploits in this direction in the miserable agitation connected with the Ilbert Bill No. 1, this statement in regard to the Ilbert Bill No. 2 will sound rather strong. But we entirely believe it to be strictly and literally true. The disastrous results of Lord Ripon's former efforts have been happily confined within comparatively small limits—far smaller than seemed possible at one time—owing partly to the moderation and self-restraint of the outraged Anglo-Indian community, who rightly refused to regard the Natives as in any way accomplices of the Government, and partly to the good sense and kindly disposition of the Native community, who in like manner refused to turn against their old friends at the bidding of a tyrannical faction. But it is already evident that the mischief and social disruption produced by this Ilbert Bill No. 2 will be far-reaching indeed. Its supporters, here and in India, are not content with merely attacking the owners of landed property in Bengal and Behar. They use the Bill as an excuse for continuing those tirades against the British Raj which were the disgrace of the Ilbert faction in the late troubles—whilst, just as in the earlier agitation, a sort of mock loyalty to the person of Lord Ripon is made to serve as a cloak both for abuse of the native aristocracy and for hatred of the English name. The Anglo-Indian supporters of the Bill are, with one or two notable and deplorable exceptions, utterly insignificant; for in India they consist of a few fanatical Radical sectaries whose heads have been turned by official responsibility, whilst in England they appear to be represented by a few persons who would be otherwise unknown altogether. But the Native supporters of Lord Ripon, though probably not much more numerous, naturally belong to that very class which a wise ruler would have strenuously endeavoured to render well-affected alike to their Native superiors and to the English rule. We have always held that a potent influence for good lies unutilised in the "Anglicised" community of Bengal, whom we have been training as a middle-class in Calcutta and elsewhere, and who might well become, in God's providence, a valuable link between the English and Indian races. But alas! Lord Ripon's blind folly has set this small but important class in direct opposition both to their own countrymen and to their English fellow-subjects; and that fact alone is sufficient to justify the Maharajah's statement.

His Highness further "denies that the zemindars are rapacious and unscrupulous; and asks what they have done to deserve the treatment which the Bill would accord them." We are persuaded that every conscientious man who has resided in the Mofussil of Bengal, and has had any opportunity of becoming personally acquainted with the habits and traditions of the landed classes of that country, will heartily share the righteous indignation that underlies this question; and we trust that the Government of Lord Ripon will feel how impossible it is justly or adequately to reply to it, and how difficult it must be, as the Maharajah observes, "to understand the principles on which the Government proposes to change the present law."

MR. SLAGG'S PROPOSAL FOR AN INDIAN GRAND COMMITTEE.

MR. SLAGG, as a good honest Radical, "rejoices" that Radical factiousness has at last succeeded in bringing Indian affairs within the sphere of English party-politics. He writes to the Times to express his opinion that "the balance of evidence is decidedly in favour" of the theory that the existing system of British Administration has not "provided a large measure of prosperity and happiness for the people of India;" and accordingly, he proposes that the supreme control of Indian affairs should be made over to a Grand Committee of the House of Commons—that is, to a fortuitous concourse of English, Scotch, and Irish gentlemen, who have been selected by their constituents with absolutely no reference to their acquaintance with India or Indian politics:

This proposal is entirely in accordance with the fundamental idea underlying so many Radical theories—that knowledge and experience in this wicked world must always imply prejudice and selfishness, and that "The man in the street" is the only trustworthy authority on public affairs and other people's business. Mr. Chamberlain resolutely insists on his Merchant Shipping Bill being sent to a Grand Committee, and will not hear of a Select Committee being appointed to consider that mischievous piece of destructive meddlesomeness. Why is this? Simply because a Select Committee consists largely of experts, and has to listen to the evidence of those who know something of the subject; whilst a Grand Committee is a sort of incarnation of Radicalism, for it does nothing but talk, and must trust to luck for its facts. For precisely similar reasons, Mr. Slagg would abolish the authority of the Indian Council of the Secretary of State, and of the Executive Council of the Viceroy, and every other authority that knows anything about the facts; and would make a Parliamentary Grand Committee the arbiter of the fate of India. The Indian Council has generally been able to save the Secretary of State both from himself and from the House of Commons—except in the famous cases of that Secretary of State who lights his cigarettes with the official minutes, and that other Secretary of State who prefers to take counsel with advisers of his own choosing. The Executive Council of the Viceroy might almost have been delivered from the wrath of Mr. Slagg by that marvellous provision for the apotheosis of ignorance, that has enabled the Government at one time to send out an "inspired hatter" as Finance Member, and at another to select Mr. Ilbert as Law Member. But these typical specimens of "The man in the street" have—with the notable exception of Mr. Ilbert—generally had the good sense to be content to derive their facts and opinions from their more experienced colleagues, and simply to add thereto the technical skill and English knowledge for which they had been chosen; and so the Executive Council falls short of the Radical standard of invincible ignorance, and shares the fate of the Indian Council in Mr. Slagg's denunciation. And in lieu of this intelligent rule, we are to have the control of a Grand Committee, whose leaders and guides would be gentlemen like Mr. J. K. Cross and the Right Hon. Mr. Baxter!

But, it may perhaps be said, surely the common sense of the members of a Grand Committee of the House of Commons will induce them to accept the advice and the warnings of those who know India and her requirements? We frankly reply with another question. Does our recent experience of such typical members of Parliament as Mr. J. K. Cross, Mr. Baxter, Mr. Bright, Mr. Slagg himself, lead us to hope this? Take, for instance, Mr. Slagg's letter under notice as an illustration of the difficulty that meets even a President of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce when he endeavours to form a judgment on the relative value of evidence on Indian affairs. He says, or implies, that he has read the evidence on both sides, on the question that has come so prominently to the front of late, as to the advantage to India of British rule. We have above quoted the conclusion at which he arrives, which shows that he rejects the testimony not only of all the authoritative official reports that have ever been published, but also of every writer on Indian affairs whose opinion carries with it the slightest weight among those who know—in favour of the irresponsible statements of an utterly insignificant clique, who have sought to gain notoriety by sensational misrepresentations, and have traded on the willing credulity of demagogues in search of a cry. Here we get exactly the sort of "light and leading" on Indian affairs, that would inevitably get the upper hand in an Indian Parliamentary Grand Committee. We should be landed in a régime of moral pocket-handkerchiefs and flannel petticoats, which not even the vitality of Anglo-Indian energy and honesty would long be able to bear up against.

TAXATION OF SILVER PLATE.—Sir George Balfour, M.P., has given notice, upon going into Committee of Ways and Means, to move, "That, considering the unexampled liberality of the Government of India in freeing the produce and manufactures of the United Kingdom landed on the extensive coasts of India, from all import duties, whereby the home trade and industries have been largely benefited; also looking at the assurances and promises given during the last three Budgets that all silver plate manufactured within the Indian territories would be admitted into the United Kingdom it is now expedient that all silver plate manufactured within the Indian territories should be admitted into the United Kingdom, without any liability to either customs or excise duties; and in so resolving, this House desire to record their wish to show respect to the claims and representations so strongly urged by the Government in India and by the India Government at home to act justly and fairly in regard to the admission into England of Indian silver manufactures."

COUNCIL DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The tenders for Rs. 35,00,000 in bills on India and telegraphic transfers were received on Wednesday at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—in bills on Bombay, Rs. 10,000, average rate 1s. 7'687d.; and Madras, Rs. 10,000, average rate 1s. 7'687d. In telegraphic transfers—Calcutta, Rs. 10,50,000, average rate 1s. 7'7023d.; and Bombay, Rs. 17,00,000, average rate 1s. 7'692d., or a total of Rs. 27,70,000. Tenders for bills on Bombay and Madras at 1s. 7 11-16d., and for telegraphic transfers on Calcutta and Bombay at 1s. 7 11-16d., and above will receive in full. Subsequently the Council sold bills for Rs. 35,000 on Calcutta at 1s. 7 23-32d., and for Rs. 61,500 on Madras at 1s. 7 19-32d., while a special allotment of three lakhs of transfers was made on Calcutta at 1s. 7 23-32d. Between the 1st and the 8th inst. the total amount of remittances sold reached Rs. 40,61,500, and realised £332,719.

CHARTERED MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA, LONDON, AND CHINA.—The twenty-sixth annual report of the Court of Directors of this company, made up to December 31 last, states that the net profit for the half-year, after providing for all charges and bad and doubtful debts, amounts to £46,331 os. 9d., to which has to be added £4,154 5s. 1d. brought forward from last half-year, making together £50,485 5s. 10d. The directors have appropriated the above amount as follows:—£24,973 19s. 8d. has been added to reserve fund (bringing that fund up to £50,000), £18,750 to payment of a dividend for the half-year at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, and £6,761 6s. 2d. carried forward to the present half-year. The report adds that the holdings of Rupee Paper have been further reduced since December 31, and now consist of Four-and-a-Half per Cent. paper, valued in the books at £82½ per 1,000 rupees.

THE SILVER MARKETS AND THE EASTERN EXCHANGE.

TUESDAY.—The increase in the discount rate of the Bank of Bombay has to-day been followed by an advance in the Bank of Bengal rate to 10 per cent. This fresh indication of the growing dearth of money in India has, however, had no effect on the general position of the Silver Market. All recent arrivals having been disposed of, prices are steady at 50½d. per ounce for bars, and 49½d. for Mexican dollars. Indian exchange rates are firm at 1s. 7 21-32d. in Bombay, and 1s. 7½d. in Calcutta. China quotations show no change. Rupee Paper has been neglected, and prices are a shade easier at 81¼ to 82 for the Four-and-a-Half, and 78¼ to 78½ for the Four per Cents. The India Council have sold telegraphic transfers on Bombay for Rs. 2,50,000 at 1s. 7 23-32d. per rupee.

WEDNESDAY.—Recent arrivals of bar silver having been taken off the market, some fresh orders received to-day could only be executed at an advanced price, 50½d. per ounce being paid for some small amounts. Mexican dollars are unchanged at 49½d., with no business. Eastern exchange rates are unaltered, and Rupee Paper has been very quiet at 81¼, 82, and 78, 78½ for the Four and-a-Half and Four per Cents. respectively.

THURSDAY.—Notwithstanding that £80,000 worth of bars will be available ex Valparaiso from Chili at the beginning of next week, and that the Ville de St. Nazaire has reached St. Nazaire from Mexico with £160,000 in dollars, the Silver Market has to-day been fairly firm. The small amount of bars available were readily purchased at 50½d., but there is still no business in Mexican dollars, which are nominally quoted at 49½d. per ounce. Indian exchange rates are maintained at 1s. 7 21-32d., but China rates are still unchanged. Rupee Paper is unaltered at 78 78½ for the Four and 81½ 82 for the Four-and-a-Half per Cents. The India Council have sold 4½ lakhs of telegraphic transfers on Bombay, and one lakh on Madras at 1s. 7 23-32d. per rupee.

SATURDAY.—The bar silver which was received to-day per Euclid and Nile, valued at about £70,000, by far the greater part having been brought by the former vessel, has been sold at 50 11-16d. per ounce, showing an advance of 1-16d. The Mexican dollars ex Ville de St. Nazaire have not been dwelt with, and business in coined silver having been at a complete standstill, no actual price can be given for it. Indian exchange rates are firm at 1s. 7 11-16d. in Calcutta and 1s. 7 21-32d. in Bombay, China rates being unaltered at 5s. 0½d. in Shanghai and 3s. 8d. in Hongkong. No business has been done in Rupee Paper, and prices are unchanged at 81½ 82 and 78 78½ for the Four-and-a-Half and Four per Cents respectively. The India Council have sold three lakhs of telegraphic transfers on Calcutta at 1s. 7 23-32d. per rupee.

PRODUCE MARKETS.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson say there is no change to report in the leading produce markets, which closed to-day until the 17th inst., and transactions, as usual, at this season have been upon a limited scale. Coffee remains unsettled, but the moderate quantity of Plantation Ceylon brought forward has realised last week's prices to some recovery for fine coloury kinds. The common and medium descriptions of East India have partly found buyers at irregular and occasionally rather lower rates. Brazil is unsettled, as the stock in the chief Continental ports showed a further heavy increase during the past month, with the foreign markets generally inactive. Guatemala sold to-day at uneven prices. Nothing of interest has transpired in sugar. Beet, after slight fluctuation, closes firm at about previous quotations. Cane sugar remains exceedingly dull, and refined is quiet. The China tea market continues without alteration, the public sales being light. Indian steady. A further slight decline has been accepted for Ceylon coco. The rice market is firm, with limited transactions, owing to the firmness of importers. At the spice sales to-day few changes occurred, the tone of business being quiet. Rough Cochin ginger is again cheaper. The small sales of Chinchona went off without animation.

TEA.—From Messrs. Hawes and Hertz's fortnightly China report:—Public sales have been exceedingly small, comprising a total of 28,000 packages, 16,000 of which were Congous. The lower grades of Congou have shown a steadier and hardening tendency, but all other sorts continue without improvement.

SUGAR.—The transactions have been exceedingly limited. Nothing done in West India. Beet is steady. Yesterday a floating cargo of 4,900 basket, Java, No. 15½, sold for the United Kingdom at 19s. 6d.

being a decline on late nominal values. In the Clyde market pieces, &c., sold to a moderate extent at easier rates.

COFFEE.—The market continues inactive, but prices do not show any change for Plantation Ceylon, fine color and bold being firm; 236 casks 78 barrels and bags sold—small and common, 58s. to 62s.; middling to good middling, 65s. to 68s. 6d.; fine middling to bold, 70s. to 76s. 6d.; and fine bold, 83s. to 89s.; part of 322 cases 1,932 bags East India sold at easier rates for middling qualities, many parcels being withdrawn; color medium sold 64s. to 66s. 6d.; fine bold, 78s. to 82s.; pale grey sorts, medium to bold, 56s. 6d. to 66s.; 2,800 bags Central American descriptions went at irregular prices; Costa Rica, good ordinary to low middling, 49s. 6d. to 57s.; middling to good, 61s. to 67s.; Guatemala, good to fine ordinary, 49s. to 54s.; low middling to middling, 57s. to 62s.; good, 67s.; 207 bags Rio, floating terms, bought in 48s.; 6 casks 433 bags Jamaica sold steadily at 44s. to 47s. for good to fine ordinary.

SPICES.—A very small supply at the public sales to-day, and the only feature has been a further decline of 1s. to 2s. per cwt. upon rough Cochin ginger, which sold at 40s.; one lot, 40s. 6d. for fair small, and 41s. to 42s. per cwt. for mixed to fair hard; 544 packages offered and mostly sold; 271 bags Singapore white pepper sold 9½d.; 129 bags Penang bought in 9¼d.; of 186 bags black, 2 lots Aleppy sorts sold 7d. to 7½d.; 334 bags Pimento, 2½d. to 2¾d.; 40 bales Zanzibar cloves, 4¾d.; 25 bales stems at 1¾d.; 110 packages Singapore nutmegs, about half sold, 79's at 2s. 7d.; 105's at 1s. 11d. per lb. No mace offered.

SAGO quiet. Nothing of importance in the public sales. 756 bags Singapore fluke tapioca, small, part sold 1¾d., and one-fourth of 80 barrels Rio, at 6d. per lb.

RICE.—The cargo of Rangoon yesterday was 2,200 tons, at 8s. per cwt. March shipment, open charter, and further business has been done at the price.

THURSDAY EVENING.

The markets close for a few days, and further sales will not be resumed until the 17th inst.

CHINA TEA.—The market closes with more private inquiry, and a fair business has been done in common grades of Red leafs. Some large contracts have also passed in Packings in boxes from 10½d. to 1s. 1½d. per lb.

SUGAR.—There has not been any revival of demand. Crystallised Demerara is steady, with sales at Friday's rates. The business in West India for the week amounts to 635 casks, 6,570 barrels and bags. Beet is firm and rather dearer. In the Clyde market a quiet feeling, and prices of refined produce the same as yesterday. M. Bertrand Silz, writing from Paris on the 9th inst., makes the following remarks:—"The large circulation of ready sugar for the April engagements, of which we spoke in our last circular, the numerous offers from Germany at gradually lowering prices, the postponement until after the Easter holidays of the elaboration of the new legislation—all these have augmented the discouragement, and we might even say maddened the market. The last eight days have resulted in a fall of 2f., and we have now reached the surprising value of 48f. 25c. for ready crystals No. 3."

COFFEE.—Few transactions have occurred in this market.

RICE.—Two cargoes of Basse n sold during the week, February and April sailings, at 8s. open charter. To-day the market is quiet.

SPICES.—Black pepper has been inactive.
